SURVEYORS' INSTITUTION

SESSION 1929-1930.

FIRST ORDINARY GENERAL MEETING OF THE
SESSION 1929-1930,

Held at The Surveyors' Institution, Monday, 11th November, 1929.

The PRESIDENT said that members knew his immediate predecessor in the Chair, Mr. Charles Browning Fisher, had passed away. The last time Mr. Fisher had been on that platform it was as the recipient of a vote of thanks and appreciation, couched in no ordinary complimentary terms, of the work which he had done in presiding over The Institution in its Diamond Jubilee year, a year in which the dignity and personality of the President had meant so much. It was not necessary for him to say anything as to the position which Mr. Fisher occupied, not only in the estimation of his fellow-members, but in the estimation of all those with whom he had come in contact professionally. As President of the Land Agents' Society, as well as of The Surveyors' Institution, his work was well known, and his services during the War in arranging for the distribution of foodstuffs had laid the country under an obligation to him.

Mr. Fisher had possessed a genius for friendship, and in his association with The Institution and with the Council the value of his work had been enhanced by the feelings of affection which he inspired. In the Council chamber that afternoon Members of Council had shown, so far as lay in their power, their respect and regret, and also the deep sympathy which they all felt with Mrs. Fisher, and he now wished to give the same opportunity to the general body of members to join in the expression of those sentiments.

All members did most sincerely regret the passing of a man who was a real man, and who had been taken in what seemed to be the prime of life and usefulness.

The vote of condolence was passed in silence, the members standing.

NEW MEMBERS.

The following new Members were presented by the PRESIDENT for formal admission to membership under By-law 21, and signed the Register:—

PAPER 522.

THE OPENING ADDRESS.

By C. H. Bedells (President).

The first words of my Address must be those expressive of keen appreciation of, and grateful thanks for, the honour I have received in the call to preside for a year over the operations of the great Institution to which we belong. I do not for a moment attribute this honour to any special eminence or capacity for leadership on my part, but I believe it to be in a way a recognition of work which I have tried to do in the service of The Institution in the course of a membership of about forty-six years, and as such I may and ought to receive it with pride and satisfaction, and seek to meet its many demands to the best of my strength and ability.

Forty-two years ago Mr. W. J. Beadel in his Presidential Address, referring to the provision made by The Institution for the education of its professional successors, said: "Among the students whom I see before me is seated, no doubt, a future President of this Institution. If so, I hope and am sure that he will remember in his Inaugural Address to do us the justice of admitting that we did the best we could in our day to secure for those who will follow us the position to which we consider the surveyor entitled, but which he cannot attain without the special and exact training long looked upon as necessary in other professions."

As I recall these words—although, from one point of view, I was then no longer technically a "student"—I should like to accept the challenge, and make my acknowledgment of the wisdom of those who guided the affairs of our Institution at the time of the inauguration of the examination system; and to express my thanks for the benefit, direct and indirect, which accrued therefrom to me in common with so many of the younger generation of that period. In doing so I have specially in my mind a by-product of that system which probably was hardly present in the minds of those who drew up the first syllabus—I mean the associations and friendships formed in those early days amongst those who submitted themselves to the then voluntary ordeal.

From those associations sprang an organisation which has been of very great value individually and collectively during the past generation, and is destined to be of the greatest value in the future to which we look forward. I refer to the Junior Organisation, and it is an especial pleasure to me to do this for two reasons: first, because this year the organisation celebrates its fortieth birthday, and, second, that I have the honour of being the oldest surviving chairman, and of having been associated with those, a diminished band, alas! who first, with such skill and guile as they possessed, drafted a very humble petition to the Council, as a consequence of which Junior Meetings were authorised (subject to certain conditions). These meetings, continued year by year, are still subject to the time-honoured formula, and have done much to give to many of our members facility of expression and ability in the discussion of professional subjects, and incidentally have assured to the younger members a very vital part and interest both in the working and the well-being of The Institution to which they belong.

It is not altogether without amusement that one recalls the doubts and fears of some of the seniors of that far-away period lest an organisation of young surveyors should provide too fertile a seed plot of subversive or revolutionary ideas. The erection of a tablet in the Entrance Hall of The Institution, inscribed with the names of all the chairmen and secretaries, may be regarded as the testimony of the Council to the way in which the facilities granted have been used, and of their appreciation of the service that the younger generation, both within and outside the Council, have rendered, and it is only just to say are still rendering, The Institution as a whole.

Commencing with a single society meeting in London, that organisation, having met a very definite want, has now taken root elsewhere, and 11 Junior Branches, embracing 24 counties and Scotland, are already formed, while 4 more Branches to embrace 12 counties are in course of formation.

One of the happy features which characterises the organisation as a whole is the presence, on the present and past executives, of Junior Members bearing names which have long been honoured in The Institution, with the inception and progress of which those names will always be associated.

While I am expressing my personal thanks for the opportunities thus afforded to me, I must not forget the thanks I owe to my father, who from the first urged me to cultivate an interest in The Institution and made it possible for me to devote more time to its work than would otherwise have been possible to me.

Casting round for a subject which might be of general interest and at the same time focus our thoughts on some of the problems which face our profession at the present time, or will do so in the immediate future, I have selected as the main theme of my Inaugural Address the Regulation and Restriction of Building.

By this I do not mean only the statutory or quasi-statutory regulations and restrictions affecting buildings, though naturally these must take the chief place, but also I have in mind restrictions arising either indirectly from legislative enactments or from rights and easements appertaining to the ownership of land, which determine the extent and nature of the buildings which can be erected.

First, then, as to Statutory Regulations.

Mr. Frank Hunt, in a recent Paper on "Zoning in the "Control of large Cities" (Transactions, Vol. LV., 1922-23), sketched the succession of Acts affecting London streets and buildings, starting with the rather shadowy evidence of regulations at the beginning of the 13th century and following on with more detailed reference to the legislation subsequent to the Great Fire, and from thence onwards to the present day; but it was not necessary for Mr. Hunt's purpose to deal at length with the Acts affecting building operations. I think it is interesting and instructive to fill in a little of the detail, and to sketch lightly the progressive extensions by the various Acts of the scope of their operations.

Passing mention only is needful of the first of Elizabeth, 7th July, 1580, providing for one family only to a house, as this is well known, but this was followed by proclamations in 1607, 1608, 1611 (3), 1615, 1618, 1619, 1620, and 1624, not so well known.

These were made to "forbid new buildings," "for restraint of buildings," "for an utter cessation" of further new buildings, for "revoking all licences granted for erecting new buildings within the City of London or two miles distant," for "matter of buildings," for "explaining and enlarging His Majesty's order for buildings," &c. Some of these proclamations were collected with others and printed in a volume, with the result that a remonstrance by the Commons was made in an Address to the King, complaining of the "reducing of proclamations to a book like the statutes to give them like dignity and effect." The assumption of such authority outside of an Act of Parliament annoyed them, just as now strong protest is made against the issue or sanction by a public department of requirements without these having been first discussed in and confirmed by Parliament.

The proclamation of 1607 not only prohibited new buildings but stipulated that those rebuilt on an old foundations should be such "as shall both adorne and beautifie his (i.e., the King's) sayde Citie," likewise be such as "in regard to the charge of building cannot be inhabited but by persons of some ability." This proclamation also purports to be a consolidation of former proclamations. It professes to make and publish "one clear proclamation digested into plaine and distinct articles that the offenders . . . may be without all colour of excuse." It also prohibits rebuilding on the old foundations of any dwelling-house, except the forefront be brick or stone, and the "forefront" (i.e., the elevation) also thereof shall be made "in that uniforme sorte and order which shall be prescribed" by the aldermen in the City and by two or more justices of the peace within the suburbs

“for the better beautifying of the street where the said building shall be erected.”

Here we get not only the germ of a control of elevations, but also the suggestion of the authority which, as will appear later, is to have a say in the consideration thereof.

In the proclamation of the following year persons contemplating the erection of buildings are urged to “see what is done in other well-polliced cities of Europe” as justification of the requirements to which it subjects them.

The proclamation of 1611, after prohibiting encroachments on the street either above or upon the ground, prohibits any “jutties” or “outwindows” or “trussing over” other than windows called “cant windows,” projecting not more than $1\frac{1}{2}$ feet. Doors and windows are allowed of wood “to the saving of room and convenience of shoppes.”

The proclamation of the 17th July, 1620, is a specially interesting one as it refers expressly to the regulation of the Lord Mayor, Henry FitzAllwyn (temp. Richard I.) requiring buildings to be of stone, and amongst other things it complains of the way in which people rather than face the cost of a stone or brick building patched up the old, so that the design of the king was “hindered through the supportation and strengthening of ruinous and old buildings unfit to be continued, by digging of cellars and bringing up new brick walls, by erecting new chimneys and stayrecases, by placing pieces of timber, by setting on new roofs and rafters and thrusting out of dormers, knitting and fastening together the said new additions with the old timbers by barres and cramps of iron and other like devices whereby the old deformity is not only continued but increased.”

This frame of mind—human nature being much the same now as in those days—has to be reckoned with, when considering the effect of provisions which contemplate taking advantage of rebuildings to deprive owners, without compensation, of rights or privileges they now enjoy.

All the statutes recited by Mr. Hunt more or less explicitly contemplate regulations with a view to preventing the spread of fire rather than the regulation of matters of construction.

In the title of one of these, viz., the Act of 1846, there is a personal reference which I should imagine is unique in such a place, "and for more effectually preventing accidents" "by fire . . . by permitting John's Patent Ties to be" "used in covering of houses and buildings within the places" "therein mentioned."

The districts to which these Acts apply are from time to time extended with the growth of the metropolis.

The Act of 1844, for instance, recites in its preamble "Forasmuch as buildings have since been extended in nearly" "continuous lines or streets far beyond such limits," new districts including Fulham, Hammersmith, Kensington, Hounslow, Tottenham, Stoke Newington, Hackney, Hornsey, and parts within the extreme boundaries of Wandsworth, Clapham, Greenwich, Deptford, Lee, Lewisham, Croydon, and Sevenoaks, Tooting and Wandsworth are added, and in view of growth of population and "the tendency of this" "Act to induce building speculation in such neighbourhoods" (i.e., those districts adjoining those to which the Act is so apply), "in order to evade the provisions thereof," it is provided that if "from the growing increase of the population" "or otherwise it shall appear to Her Majesty in Council to" "be expedient that the provisions of this Act be extended" "to any place within 12 miles of Charing Cross, the Act" "should be made to apply to such after due notice."

This Act prescribed for improvement of drainage, for securing sufficient width of streets, and provided for dangerous and explosive works.

It also contemplated the appointment of two official referees in addition to district surveyors and provided that in certain cases an appeal lay from the district surveyors to the official referees, a power of which I expect some of us would, at one time or another, have been glad to avail ourselves had it survived to our day and generation in cases outside dangerous structures.

Not only so, but special powers were allowed to "exec." "also in certain cases and under certain checks and control

“ a discretion in the relaxation of the fixed rules where the strict observance thereof is impracticable or would defeat the object of this Act or needlessly affect with injury the course and operation of this branch of business.”

There was also appointed a registrar of metropolitan buildings whose duty it was to keep the awards or decisions of the official referees, and there was a right to any party or person demanding the same to inspect and copy or extract therefrom on payment of the appropriate fees—a very useful power which might well be given in certain matters at the present time.

This Act ran its course for only 11 years, to be replaced by the Building Act of 1855, which latter Act, subject to sundry amendment Acts, continued in force until superseded nearly forty years later by the 1894 Building Act.

For the first time, I think, this 1855 Act provided (in a single section) “ for space about buildings.”

I think it may be said that the 1894 Act, which bears evidence of the influence of our Institution, and its amending Acts, have worked well; but experience has shown that it can be further amended in certain directions with advantage. The London County Council, faced with its latest amendment relative to the fees of district surveyors, came to the conclusion that the inconvenience of the number and complexity of the Acts in force showed that consolidation was necessary as a preliminary to new legislation, and their Bill to effect this consolidation, introduced last Session, is carried forward to this Session.

It is interesting to observe from the preamble of the 1894 Act that the “ enactments relative to streets and buildings in London ” were said to be contained in 13 Acts of Parliament, whereas, according to the schedule in the last edition of Cubitt's Building in London, which takes matters only up to 1911, the regulations applying to buildings in London are to be found in no less than 48 statutes and 32 sets of bye-laws, since when there has been much additional legislation, both private and public.

Now, although the preamble of the London County Council Consolidation Bill recites that it is expedient to consolidate the enactments relating to streets and buildings in London, it of necessity leaves very many of these Acts, not to mention bye-laws, contained in Cubitt's Schedule, untouched. It is to be hoped that when the London County Council come to draft their new Building Bill they will take a leaf out of the New York authorities' book, and see that, to quote Mr. Topham Forrest, "the whole of the laws, "&c., are collected in one volume published under official "arrangements, and in each reissue, in the text of each law "are incorporated the latest revisions."

Precise information as to the intentions of the London County Council as to revision is not available, but Mr. Topham Forrest, in the summary of his interesting and valuable Report made to the Council after his visit to America to study building and zoning, makes certain recommendations, and it seems probable that these will form part of the new Bill. A copy of this report is in The Institution Library.

When the draft of any new Bill is before the members of The Institution they will scrutinise it carefully to see if it contains all the matters as to which regulations would seem to be necessary. Time does not permit me to suggest many which occur to me.

It is quite time that I turned for a very brief glance to restrictions applying to buildings outside the metropolis.

The earliest statute I have so far come across relates to the cities of Gloucester, Nottingham, and Northampton, and it decrees that owners were not to be allowed to leave their houses derelict as a source of danger to persons using the streets, &c., in the city. The procedure adopted to meet this state of things was that such owners of derelict property, after notice, should clear them away or rebuild them; and that if they did not do so for three years the municipality should become possessed of the property for the purpose of rebuilding, and that if they, in their turn, did not for a space of four years exercise the right thus given, then the original owners again should have their opportunity by resuming possession and putting proper buildings on the site.

So far as I have been able to ascertain by enquiries made of the surveyors and engineers of many large cities and towns in the kingdom—to whom I am greatly indebted for their replies to my questionnaire—there were no statutes expressly applying to buildings in towns in the country until the second half of the 18th century.

To take Bristol as an example: in 1748 by its Improvements Act it controlled rain water from houses, and could require the removal of signs obstructing the light of lamps; and in 1761, houses when rebuilt were not allowed to project beyond the storey-posts and party-walls.

Similar provisions are to be found in the records relating to other towns.

In Winchester the Paving Act is dated 1771, and dealt with projections of bay windows, &c., but there was no regulation as to height of the buildings themselves.

Acts became frequent at about the beginning of the second quarter of the 19th century. The Plymouth Lighting and Watching Act was dated 1824. York and Liverpool obtained Acts in 1825, the latter a bonâ fide Building Act, and surveyors are thereby appointed to act under oath. The first Bristol Improvement Acts are dated 1837 and 1840.

The Acts passed about 1840 to 1850 were very comprehensive Acts; they classified buildings, determined thickness of walls, and dealt with the rights of adjoining owners, and new buildings were regulated by the width of the street. This, no doubt, was the direct result of the passing of the Towns Improvements Clauses Act, 1847, which included also provisions as to dangerous buildings.

Manchester, whose first Act seems to have been in 1844, was very active, as it promoted two additional Acts in the 'forties, three in the 'sixties, two in the 'seventies, four in the 'eighties, and three in the 'nineties. Manchester, again, was one of the first places in England to obtain powers over the elevations of buildings erected fronting on to improved streets, and one of the first places to provide a municipal referenced code, having realised thus early the difficulty of dealing with scattered enactments.

There were, of course, local variations in these Acts. For instance, in Cardiff, under the heading of "Space about "Buildings," four parts were required to be unbuilt upon to five parts built upon; but in this case the authority had power to make modifications at their discretion. I am handing over to the Library the replies made to my questionnaire, so that they may be consulted by any interested, and also because, to my regret, I have not been able to utilise their material as I should have liked.

In addition to ad hoc Acts of Parliament there has been, of course, regulation by bye-laws, and, so far as I have been able to ascertain, although there were in one or two places bye-laws which became operative as far back as 1822, this system did not generally obtain until 1859 or thereabouts, when York and Plymouth issued theirs.

Model bye-laws were issued under the Public Health Act, 1848, and under the Local Government Act of 1858, and the Public Health Act of 1875, which amended it, and the bye-laws authorised were such as would deal, inter alia, with the construction of walls to ensure stability and prevention of fire, air space and frontage of buildings, setting back, and payment of compensation.

The set of model bye-laws issued under the last-mentioned Act embodied many of the provisions of the Metropolitan Building Act of 1855, but the bye-laws applied generally to new buildings on new streets, and very little, if at all, to existing buildings. From this period the development of building legislation and bye-laws will be within the memory or knowledge of all the members of The Institution.

Thanks to the activity of the Ministry of Health since the War, there has been a very great step taken towards making the bye-laws of various authorities more reasonable and suitable to the various localities, and from one point of view it is gratifying to see that in the last fifteen years nearly seventeen hundred local authorities have availed themselves of the opportunity of bringing their bye-laws up to date so as "to encourage the country's trade by removing obstacles

“ to the use of modern methods and materials,” and to follow the movement “in favour of greater freedom.” On the other hand there are those who contend that in the interest of good building the relaxation has gone too far.

There has been a recent development of control, to which reference should be made. Arising out of the greatly increased interest in the architectural growth of cities, there has been a definite recognition in many private Acts promoted by towns and cities throughout the country of the necessity of restraining the liberty of the individual so far as the external aspect of his building is concerned as well as its stability.

In the first instance modern regulations affecting elevations were confined to those of buildings fronting on to improved streets. For obvious reasons it was desirable that advantage should be taken of a widened street to obtain adequate buildings of satisfactory standard and appearance, by making such stipulations a condition of the disposal of the frontages, either by sale or by letting, or where this state of things did not obtain, the authority in some cases secured its end by undertaking to bear a portion of the expense of a more ornate or attractive building.

The first instance of this latter expedient that I have been able to find was in the Dublin Corporation Act of 1790, wherein the owners on one side of certain streets were bound to put up a building of the same character as those on the other side, and the difference between a plain brick building and what was required was to be paid by the Corporation; and it will be in the remembrance of a good many in this room that a similar arrangement was made by the London County Council with regard to the Gaiety Theatre at the entrance to Aldwych, and was the subject of a very heavy claim.

By 1925, however, there was a further step forward towards giving practical effect to the desire to regulate elevations of buildings fronting on all streets, and in that year an Act was obtained by the borough of Hastings which gave that authority power to make bye-laws requiring elevations to be submitted to them which they could approve or disapprove; and the Act provided for an appeal to the Ministry of Health, upon which the Minister of Health, or someone nominated by him, was bound to adjudicate within one month. Similar power was also given in the case of Liverpool.

Apparently the Ministry of Health realised the difficulties which might arise if they attempted to set up a standard of taste and selection of materials. At all events, when the city of Bath and the town of Walsall in the following year introduced their Bills the power to make bye-laws as affecting elevations was retained, but with an appeal to an advisory committee constituted of a Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects, appointed by its president, and a Fellow of The Surveyors' Institution similarly appointed, and a Justice of the Peace appointed by the Corporation but not a member thereof.

The precedent thus set has been followed in many private Acts since.

This development of control raises interesting questions, Nottingham case in point. At the present moment it would appear that in most cases the corporation can only refuse to approve and refer to the advisory committee cases where they consider that, having regard "to the general character of the existing buildings in the street or the buildings proposed therein to be erected, the building to which the elevations refer would seriously disfigure the street, whether by reason of the height of the building or its design or the materials proposed to be used in its construction."

The committee, after considering the building owners' views, arrives at a decision which is final and conclusive, and its report is required to be accompanied by a statement of the grounds on which the proposed building is considered to be objectionable.

I remember seeing in an article on "Good Manners in Civic Design" some criteria which may be suggestive in this connection, "that a building should not have wrong emphasis in its parts," e.g., a prominent display of soil pipes; "that buildings should not ignore each other"; "that

“in order that public buildings should not feel humiliated “adjoining buildings should not make it impossible that the “most important public buildings should have sufficient “emphasis.”

It is to be hoped, however, that the common-sense of a tribunal, constituted as are the tribunals previously referred to, will lead to the control being reasonable and yet effective.

It is the function of the trained surveyor to look forward and form a judgment as to the future development of land, and if to this training the surveyor adds in his equipment a cultivated taste and a habit of observation of the best architecture of his day, and of how the differing requirements of various owners of buildings can be accommodated and harmonised, it seems to me they must always have a valued place in a tribunal of this kind, more valuable, indeed, than a too heavy representation of those more definitely associated with fine arts.

The subject, however, is one well worth thoughtful consideration in various aspects, one of which might be whether it is compatible with the dignity of a city to allow of buildings being constructed which would constitute a permanent advertisement of a commercial article. A building recently erected in London may fairly be so regarded, and it might be quite easily followed by a building which would be a permanent and effective advertisement of, shall we say, “Whale’s Brown Dog Biscuits.”

It would appear that in Scotland the discretion vested in that very interesting and ancient Institution, the Dean of Court Guild,* extends beyond mere negative restriction. In Edinburgh, for instance, the Dean of Guild may order alterations to be made in regard to the elevation or design or materials, and require the plans to be amended, subject to an appeal to the Corporation. There are some interesting decrees relating to Scotch guilds and statutes in the 17th and

* It is stipulated in the composition of the Edinburgh Dean of Guild, which consists of 15 persons, five shall be persons carrying on, or who have carried on, the business of architects, civil engineers, surveyors, or master builders. This Guild boasts of continuous records from 1529 and the Glasgow letter of Guildry to 1605.

18th centuries relating to Edinburgh, Glasgow and Aberdeen, but I have not time to refer to them but must pass to legislative enactments which at the present moment restrict buildings in the country, and which will later on to a greater or less extent operate to the same end, but probably by somewhat different methods, in regard to the buildings in towns and cities. I refer, of course, to town planning legislation.

The statutes we have been considering regulate, to a more or less drastic degree, the extent and construction of buildings, but town planning legislation may very well, in certain circumstances, prevent the erection of buildings altogether.

Given a settled density of so many houses to the acre and land developed on that basis, even though such buildings may be concentrated to a considerable extent in one part of an area, the building of another house, or material extension of existing houses in relatively open spaces, may become illegal, or give rise to demands by an authority for payment of some consideration for permission. This is supposed to be to the advantage of the public; but it seems to me a question whether the time will not come when it will be recognised that to restrict building in advance to such an extent, and for all time, will be found to be as unreasonable as we may now regard the frantic and futile endeavours arbitrarily and absolutely to restrain the expansion of a great city.

At present, however, town planners may be regarded as having matters all their own way, and it is generally regarded that they have established the necessity for some extension of these activities, the only question being as to their legitimate extent.

As town planning as applied to buildings in built-up areas will form one of the subjects to be discussed on a Paper to be read at a General Meeting later on in the present session, it is not desirable that I should say much here on that subject; but as I had personal interest as surveyor to three estates, two within and the third just outside the area, in the most considerable scheme which has at present been formulated for London to apply to an area of which a very large portion has already been developed, viz., what was known as the Consolidated Holborn and St. Pancras Town Planning Scheme, I think it may be of some interest if I indicate, not I hope in any ex parte manner, a few of the many points which emerged in the proceedings in the Inquiry before the Inspector of the Ministry of Health on the preliminary statement. These resulted, as members will no doubt remember, in a pronouncement of the Ministry, after consulting the legal advisers of the Crown, that the scheme, so far as it affected the built-up areas, was ultra vires.

The first point to which I may refer is with regard to the area proposed as limiting a scheme.

In that particular scheme the town-planned area, so far as it specially interested me, ended on its southern boundary with the north side of Theobalds Road; and if the scheme had passed, all the property to the south of that thoroughfare would have been capable of development under the regulations of the London Building Act, whereas the property to the north of the street would have been restricted to a considerably greater extent in respect of height, proportion of site to be covered by buildings, and also in respect of its user. [To justify such differentiation it was suggested that there was a material difference in the occupation of the properties south and north of Theobalds Road respectively.]

Secondly, no exemptions were proposed at all analogous to the exceptions in the 1894 Building Act in favour of the re-erection of existing buildings, either as to height or site area, neither was there any suggestion that the application of the principles of a scheme containing no such exceptions would be accompanied by compensation.

Thirdly, the hard-and-fast regulation was suggested of one and a quarter times the width of the street as the permissible height to the parapet of new buildings, the effect of which would have been to restrict new buildings to substantially less height than modern buildings alongside in the same street. Section 47 of the London Building Act provides, it will be remembered, that the height of existing buildings forming part of a continuous block or row of buildings shall determine the permissible height of the remainder.

With regard to user, though occupations contrary to the specific user would be permitted to continue if existing (not being actual nuisance occupations), it was suggested that the mere failure to let or occupy the premises for the old particular purpose for six months would, by itself, be sufficient to negative the resumption of the use of the premises for their existing purpose, and no new buildings or additions could be erected for such purpose without consent.

Again, it was suggested in cross-examination that difficulties would arise because the effective building space between two streets already established would be insufficient for reasonable buildings which would comply both with the specified user and the requirements of space about buildings ; and that the existence of a hard-and-fast line defining permissible user in a neighbourhood so developed would prevent exchange being effected between adjoining owners for the purpose of adding land to improve the development of a site.

Further, although within the area of the scheme, there happened to be, comparatively speaking, few individual owners, and although in the original resolution of the London County Council the hope was expressed that the Council would be able to assist in promoting a scheme of redevelopment of the whole area, when the scheme was disclosed, no attempt was discoverable to improve the layout of the district by the construction by the town planning authority at present or in the future of any new roads ; but the suggestion was made that the development of some of the land within the area could be carried out by two or more of the owners agreeing themselves to carry out a wholesale clearing and reconstruction scheme. The difficulty in the way of inducing several owners of any considerable amount of property in a district to join hands in such a scheme of demolition and replanning will be in the minds of the members of The Institution, and this illustrates one of the points of contrast between the application of town planning principles to the country and to built-up urban areas.

It is perhaps fair to repeat that the proceedings in this case arose on the preliminary statement, and that some of the matters referred to might and possibly would have been adjusted in subsequent stages if the scheme had proceeded.

It is contended by the town planners that by combined action neighbouring owners may, by agreeing a common plan, develop their land without substantial loss; but though this may be so in districts undeveloped as yet, it remains, I think, for the town planners to prove that anything analogous to this can be ordinarily anticipated in built-up areas with many individual ownerships and interests.

At present the "great divide" lies between the advocates of town planning without compensation, and those who, while giving their general adhesion to the principles of town planning, hold that these cannot be applied in built-up areas unless the principle of compensation for actual and proved injury is generally admitted to be applicable.

Whatever our views, however, may be, as to the suggested developments, perhaps we may agree in this: that proposals such as those in relation to town planning of built-up areas involving such difficult problems should be regulated, at all events, in their principles by public and not by private Acts, so that there may be opportunity of adequate discussion not rendered difficult by the cost, incident to opposition to Private Bill legislation.

In the case of the city of Chester, a local Act of Parliament has already been obtained importing certain powers of town planning, and similar proposals have recently been made in the cases of Derby and Birmingham.

In the history of bye-law legislation much difficulty arose through the use, in the country, of regulations originally drafted for functioning in towns, and it is to be hoped that if the legislation which is proposed with regard to built-up areas is introduced, no attempt will be made to reverse the process, but that it will be in an ad hoc Bill considered afresh, and with built-up conditions alone in view. It is necessary to stress this point, as in the private Act referred to, the Act of 1925 is used and referred to in the text and is already worked upon as a precedent.

As to the proposal to confer statutory sanction on regional town planning reports, I can only, in passing, remark that it seems to me that it would involve alteration either in the scope or in the character of these reports.

The only other statutory restrictions to which I propose to refer, and that only in a word or two, are the Rent Restriction Acts.

From my own experience, and from enquiries I have made, I think the extent to which rebuilding schemes have been rendered impossible by these Acts during the last few years, if it were possible to ascertain the facts, would be the source of very considerable surprise; not only in many cases does the existence of a few statutory tenancies in a block of houses make the chance of possession for reconstruction purposes a matter of great uncertainty, but in many cases tenants who have been occupying the premises either at compassionate rents, or at rents which are now much less than the normal rent for similar accommodation payable in the neighbourhood, cannot be induced by any moderate payment to vacate their premises, because in any new occupation they would have to pay the normal and not an artificially restricted rent.

If the Rent Restriction Acts are to be extended for yet another period, and this is now proposed under the Expiring Laws Continuation procedure, it is suggested that in cases where it can be shown that the existence of one or more tenancies of the kind is and has long been hampering the carrying out of substantial building schemes, it would be reasonable, and in the public interest, that a landlord should be entitled to have possession of the property if, in lieu of providing alternative accommodation, he is prepared to pay to his tenant the reasonable costs of removal, and in cases of special hardship a further payment in respect of any increased rent which a tenant might have to pay for similar accommodation for such a limited period as might be considered reasonable by a county court judge or referee, not exceeding six months.

Not only would this expedient lead to additional employment being available in the building industry, and provide business accommodation for which there is demand, but also this accommodation would make a substantial contribution to the rates in the localities in which the present buildings are situate.

We may now turn to regulations and restrictions outside statutory enactments, e.g. (a) from restrictive covenants; (b) from easements.

The position with regard to restrictive covenants generally has for a long time been very unsatisfactory. On the one hand many restrictive covenants are excellent and still valid in their requirements, but the power of enforcement is difficult to exercise; and, on the other hand, in many cases restrictions which once were useful have ceased, in view of changing circumstances, to be any longer desirable or necessary.

No solution has at present been found to deal with the first, but to meet the difficulties arising from the second of these causes, Section 84 was included in the Law of Property Act, 1925, to make it possible to secure variation or abolition of obsolete covenants by a reference to the official arbitrator.

The cases which have arisen and are arising under this section are fairly numerous and are increasing in number. Up to the time of writing, some 178 cases have been sent for trial to the official arbitrators, and it would seem, judging from their findings, so far as record of these is available, that good cause has been shown for the revision contemplated by the Act, and that it is reasonably meeting the difficulty.

A few points to which I may draw attention have emerged as to which some decision or change in the law would appear to be desirable.

The right to enforce the observance of restrictions made long ago depends either upon the proof of the existence of a "scheme" of development or the existence of a continuing contractual covenant often quite difficult of proof.

It is true that hitherto, in cases which have been dealt with by the official arbitrators, the evidence of objectors which has been received has not been confined to that given by those proved to be legally entitled to the benefit of the restriction, but on account of its being a matter of public interest greater latitude has been permitted. The objector, however, unless he is entitled legally to the benefit of the restriction, has not been held entitled to recover compensation for the consequence of modification or removal.

But if persons are to be really damnified by the application of a revising power which has a large discretion in the way of imposing conditions to modify the prejudicial effect of revision or removal, it does not seem unreasonable that, in view of the intention expressed by the wording of the section, it should be placed within the power of the arbitrator to make as a condition of his award a money payment to any person suffering loss in consequence of the relief.

Second, many cases occur in which restrictions, imposed by an owner dealing with his property and desiring to do so without detriment to his neighbours, become through death and dispersal of property inoperative in course of time, there being then left no one legally entitled or having sufficient pecuniary interest in the enforcement to secure steps being taken for that purpose. The number and importance of such cases will, no doubt, be reduced as town planning schemes with zoning and other regulations become operative, but it might be worth while considering whether a scheme could not be devised for vesting in the local authority by its town planning scheme or committee the right to keep such covenants effective. The local authority, as representing the public, is usually given the opportunity of expressing an opinion in the course of the proceedings in respect of proposed variations. It would be a step further to make them interested parties when developments or occupations are contemplated contrary to restrictions known to have been imposed when an estate was developed or sold.

Third: with regard to the costs incident to the hearing of applications under Section 84, it would seem that no provision has been made in the Act giving the arbitrator express power to award costs either to applicants or objectors. In more than one case the arbitrator has awarded costs as far as he was able to do so, but the result of enquiries on the subject would seem to show that neither of the parties has gone as far as legal proceedings to obtain judgment or satisfaction, and some revision to allow of costs being awarded seems definitely called for, were it only to restrain the making of frivolous objections or unreasonable applications.

Fourth: a case which came under my notice quite recently raised a further question, viz., whether Parliament intended that Section 84 should allow of the revision of covenants affecting land, not to facilitate the development of the land itself for building, but to assist the development of land adjacent thereto. In this particular case the land in question was sold subject to a restrictive covenant against the use thereof for the purpose of a road, and an application for the discharge of this covenant has been made before one of the official arbitrators, whose decision has not yet been reported.

One other observation may be made, and that is that it would be very desirable if the decisions and orders given by the official arbitrators were open to inspection as a guide to surveyors and others in dealing with and developing property.

At present the position appears to be that proceedings can be reported, and that there is nothing to prevent any of the parties giving information as to the result, but that there is no right to apply to the Reference Committee or their staff for information. It seems to me that if there were such a power it would be valuable.

Twenty-nine years have elapsed since a proposal was first made from this Chair to amend the law in relation to the acquisition of rights of light and to facilitate the settlement of questions arising under rights already established. It is to be regretted that matters are still as they were then, and that nothing has at present resulted from the endeavour recently made by The Institution in conjunction with representatives from the Royal Institute of British Architects in discussion with the representatives of the Law Society to arrive at an agreed basis for a Bill to render it impossible for additional adverse rights of light to arise after a fixed date by prescription only, or under the fiction of a lost grant, and to facilitate the settlement of disputes.

I do not know whether, in view of the limited extent of common agreement at present arrived at, the Law Society will think it worth while to promote a Bill, but if they do, it will provide a further opportunity of discussing the matter with them, and at that time to consider another aspect of the case which seems to me to warrant an attempt to vary the law as it stands at present, in consequence of the decision in the case of Colls v. The Home and Colonial Stores, but which has at present received no adequate discussion.

The application of the criterion of the amount of light left to the dominant tenement as compared with the quantum of light taken away often results in essential injustice in favour of an owner who happens to be the first to build as compared with adjoining owners who subsequently desire to do so.

This is a factor which is usually in the mind of any estate surveyor before permitting a greatly increased height to a proposed building lessee. The provision for the reasonable development of buildings on the sites adjoining would be duly taken into account, and such a development should be assumed when estimating the light left. I am not without hope that this particular point would receive serious consideration by the representatives of the Law Society, because it is a difficulty which arises from, or is accentuated by, a legal decision which to a large extent changed the interpretation of the law and also the practice.

Notwithstanding the existence of all the regulations acting in restriction of building, to which reference has been made, the difficulties in the way of possession, and the greatly increased costs of building, it is gratifying to be able to record steady progress in the rebuilding and improvement of London.

In 1885 Mr. I'Anson referred to the record of the activities of London district surveyors as indicating the general extent of building development.

During the first year after the war, 1919, the new buildings dropped to 1,341, and the additions and alterations to 17,338. These figures have now happily steadily risen to 8,977 new buildings, and 39,508 additions and alterations in 1928.

Annexed to this Address I have appended a table (by the courtesy of Mr. Topham Forrest) which indicates the progress made in recuperation in the intervening years.

Leaving the subject of buildings and glancing back over the legislation of the past year, there is very little fortunately which affects us directly. Recent legislation has, however, provided much in the way of problems and new experience, and in the session to which we are looking forward opportunity will be given for discussion of some of the most important of these.

As to the future, if the pledges of the Government are to be fulfilled, it probably contains legislation which will provide further difficulties and duties for members of The Institution. Any forecast of such legislation would, however, be perhaps worse than useless.

In connection with the pressing question of slum clearances, which it is the hope and intention of the Government to expedite, it is the duty of an Institution such as ours to point out again the urgent need for an examination of the operation of Section 46 in the light of experience now accumulated, and of the hardships which have been inflicted on unfortunate owners interested in properties which, acquired under housing schemes, have become subject to the reduction factor owing to the purpose for which they are being acquired. This subject has been engaging the attention of your Parliamentary Committee, and a report which has been adopted by your Council will shortly be issued on the subject. In anticipation of this report, however, it should be perhaps said that facts brought to the notice of the Committee indicate that the application of the present standard has resulted in some cases in reducing the compensation payable by no less than 50 per cent. of the market value : this market value, be it noted, being arrived at after due allowance has been made, by way of deduction for any value attributable to overcrowding condition, or, on the other hand, after taking into consideration any disability arising by reason of the operation of all regulations, &c., applying to the land as a site in the district in which it may be situated.

It has been suggested that it has been the deliberate intention of Parliament to penalise any person having an interest in such property, irrespective of his responsibility for it. Though it is clear that Parliament in successive stages has realised the justice of some reduction of the compensation where the interest of the slum-owner was increased by the very conditions which rendered the scheme a necessity (and I do not think any criticism of their action in so doing would arise from this Institution), it is by no means equally clear that Parliament realised the severe and inequitable effect of the basis of compensation set up by Section 46, viz., a reduced site value where the acquiring authority desires to make an uneconomical use of land.

The Council are suggesting that market value should be adopted as the starting point from which compensation should be calculated.

As regards the Landlord and Tenant Act, not many cases have, so far as I am aware, been fought out before referees, the results of which are known to the public. As far as my experience goes, I have found that lessees and lessors alike rather than go before the tribunal of the county court prefer to agree to refer any question arising under the Act to arbitration before an agreed arbitrator, or, in default, to an arbitrator appointed by the President of our Institution for the time being.

The constitution of the London panel, viz., 18 barristers,

3 solicitors and 6 surveyors, to function on what must, after all be mainly questions of value or appropriateness or otherwise of alterations and improvements, is, in my humble judgment, one which should at the earliest opportunity be altered. As it stands, it rather suggests to a county court judge that in a difficulty he should turn to the barrister rather than to the surveyor.

Presumably Parliament deemed that the county court tribunal with an appeal to the High Court was adequate to deal with the legal issues likely to arise under the Act. What remained outside such issues would be questions of fact and value affecting property, and one would have thought that these should be referred for decision or report to qualified experts.

To take an actual reported case: would it be thought that a practising barrister was the ideal referee to report on the rental value of a Turkish bath behind Regent Street, approached only by a narrow passage? I am not concerned with the question whether this particular referee succeeded, or did not succeed, in arriving at a proper figure for his report. I hope he did, but the point is whether the probability of such a result being attained and justice done between the parties would not be much greater by reference to a fully qualified surveyor than to a practising barrister.

In another case just reported, the matter, after having occupied four sittings in taking evidence before the barrister, was the subject of a report which was before the county court judge, with the result that, after legal arguments of a lengthy character, the matter was again referred to the legal referee to clear up the question as to whether the figure he reported for compensation was to be reduced by a set-off of more than half its amount in respect of repairs.

I feel that some apology is due from me to the members of The Institution practising in Agriculture, for the fact that in the foregoing Address there is no reference to their work or problems; but let me assure them that this arises from the limitation of my experience, and not from any want of interest in the subject, or of failure on my part to realise of what essential importance to the country is the well-being of the industry with which they are connected, and the difficulties with which at the moment they are contending.

May my final word be to the younger generation of surveyors?

Avoiding all ungenerous policy of withholding information, give as freely as you can to the aiding of your fellow-members.

Permit me to remind you of a saying by one of the most revered of our Past-Presidents—the late Mr. Squarey: “No education can endow the surveyor of the future with his best possessions, a candid and upright mind, and a desire to deal fairly between all parties,” and to wish that it may be yours to possess that “happy mixture of moral rectitude, mental skill, and cunning,” of which Fitzbarde speaks.

Mr. J. D. WALLIS (Past-President), in proposing a hearty vote of thanks to the President for his very able and interesting Address, said that Mr. Bedells had dealt with a number of topics, all of them of much interest to surveyors, but had taken as his main theme the regulation and restriction of building. Of that subject the President was a master. In his Address he had not only given The Institution the benefit of his ripe experience and knowledge of those matters, but he had gone to the trouble of preparing an historical sketch of the progress and growth of regulations both in London and in the provinces, a history which would be of great value as a permanent record in the Journal. He thought all members would be at one with the President with regard to his observations about statutory restrictions on buildings; but he supposed they would all have to submit, and probably more in the future than they had done in the past, to such restrictions.

When one considered such recent and diverse questions as ribbon development, bungalow towns, the danger to the London squares, the need of preserving the character of, say, such a city as Chester (to which the President had referred), the great congestion in the business centres of our large cities, the slum problem, the need of further rebuilding and improvement of London, the tendency for more lofty buildings, it would be seen that there was much evidence of want of vision or foresight in the past, and how small had been the effect of bygone regulations, and how far they still were from a well-ordered and well-planned development. In thinking of those matters and many others it must be realised how essential it was to have proper and reasonable regulations. As the President had indicated, it was for the members of The Surveyors' Institution, with their practical and trained minds, to assist in securing that future regulations should be so devised and applied as to promote, in the most efficient way, the object in view.

The Institution had no politics: it was the desire of all members, whichever party was in power, that their expert knowledge might be of some service in the framing and carrying out of practical and workable measures.

He must pass over very lightly the other matters to which the President had referred—model bye-laws, town planning, the Rent Restrictions Acts, rights of light. He was sure that all members would be in general agreement with the President's views and conclusions on those matters.

With regard to the question of the removal or variation of covenants under Section 84 of the Law of Property Act, he agreed with the President that it would be very useful to have some record of the decisions of the official arbitrators under that section. In the early days of the referees under the Finance Act the decisions had been collected and published in book form, but that practice had soon been discontinued because, he supposed, it was unremunerative. He wondered if it would be possible to get from the official arbitrators a short summary of their cases and their decisions under the Law of Property Act, not, of course, under the Acquisition of Land Act, but simply under that one section, in order that they might be published in the Journal. That might be a help. Some of the decisions, though comparatively few, had been reported in the Estates Gazette.

The President had referred to the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927. Everyone would agree with him as to the desirability of questions of fact and value affecting property being referred to one of the practical surveyors on the panel. The figures of the number of barristers on the London panel were, at first sight, very startling. Perhaps the explanation might be that those barristers were appointed or sent to any part of the country when a question of law was in issue. He believed the full panel for the whole of England and Wales consisted of twenty surveyors, twenty solicitors, and eighteen barristers, and all the barristers were in London. There were none of them at all in the district where he came from. He supposed they would not necessarily deal only with London cases; but, nevertheless, the cases which the President had quoted were very disquieting, and would seem to need some further consideration and perhaps some action.

He did not want to take up the time of the meeting, but before sitting down he wished to add one word to congratulate The Institution upon having secured Mr. Bedells as its President for the ensuing year. He knew, and all those who had served on the Council of The Institution knew also, something of the devoted services which Mr. Bedells had rendered to The Institution over a long series of years. The members were very much indebted to him for what he had done. They were all grateful, and were happy to see him in the position which he had so well earned, and which he had filled, and would continue to fill, with great distinction.

Mr. JOHN A. F. WATSON (Professional Associate of Council) said that referring to the Junior Organisation of The Institution the President had reminded members that during the present year they were celebrating the fortieth anniversary of the old Junior Meetings, and that he himself was one of the pioneers who formed the original Committee in 1889. What the President had not told them, in his modesty, was that not only was he the senior past-chairman of the Junior Meetings, but that he was the first past-chairman of the Junior Meetings to occupy the Chair of The Institution, and had thus occupied in turn what might be described as the two most coveted offices which the junior and senior membership of The Institution had to offer. That night, as Hon. Secretary of the Junior Organisation and as the most Junior Member of the Council, it was his privilege, on behalf of the Junior Members, to bid the President a loyal welcome, first as President, and, secondly, if he might say so, as one of themselves.

Forty years ago the Council of The Surveyors' Institution had received a humble petition from the younger generation. Risking subversion and revolution, the Council had allowed the younger members of that day to hold Junior Meetings in The Institution building, and in so doing they had sown the seeds of the Junior Organisation. Looking back over those forty years, he did not think the President could have much cause to regret the enthusiasm which had prompted that humble petition, and the record of good work well done by the Junior Members of that generation was an inspiring example to those of the present day. The Junior Members were proud also to see a past-chairman and a past hon. secretary of the Junior Committee sitting side by side for the first time as President and Hon. Secretary of The Surveyors' Institution. And if the members of that Council of yesteryear were present that night—and who knew if they were not—and if they were able to study the work done by the members of that body to which they had given birth, he felt sure that they too would have little reason to be disappointed.

The President had said that in those far-away days some Senior Members were possessed of doubts lest the younger men were inspired with a spirit of revolution and subversion. Although the President had not said so, he thought they could deduce from that, that although their anxiety itself was obviously entirely unnecessary, it was probably founded on fact; and he had no doubt that the Junior Members of 1889 were just as much inspired with the revolutionary spirit, in other words, with the imagination, optimism and enthusiasm of youth, as the Junior Members of 1929.

It was often said that the present day was full of opportunities for youth; whether that was so or not, there certainly never was an age when the younger generation were faced with a heavier burden of responsibility or had more important work to do. Eleven years ago that night England had emerged from the war years, largely by the efforts of her "junior members," and it was the Junior Members of the present day who had got to play the biggest part in the task of reconstruction which still lay before them. He did not wish to keep the meeting by dwelling upon the part The Institution had to play in that task, but he did want to emphasise the necessity of mutual understanding between the workers of all ages, both inside and outside that Institution.

There were now 3,000 Junior Members of The Surveyors Institution, and, as the President had said, there were eleven Branches, and those Branches would shortly cover three-quarters of the counties of England and Wales in addition to Scotland. It could not be overemphasised, however, that the Junior Organisation was not an end in itself, and that a Junior Member whose interest was confined solely to that sphere of activity possessed an interest which was comparatively worthless. The whole of the Junior Organisation was to foster a spirit of keen interest, not merely in the Organisation itself, but in the profession as a whole.

In conclusion, the President could afford to look back. The younger members of the present day had got to look forward. Forty years back the President's generation had created a fine tradition, and in seconding the vote of thanks he wanted to assure the President, on behalf of the present generation, that with his example and with his help for forty years on that fine tradition would be maintained.

Sir BANISTER FLETCHER (Fellow) (President R.I.B.A.) said it gave him very great pleasure to be there that evening, as the President of the Royal Institute of British Architects, to bring his good wishes to the President of The Surveyors' Institution. He had recently been through the difficulty of preparing and delivering an inaugural address, and he therefore felt that the President and he had been companions in distress. He felt quite certain that he had not got through his little bit of business as well as the President had done.

He and the President had known each other for a great number of years. He had also known the President's father, and it was a very great pleasure to him to see that he had attained to the leadership of his own profession.

He felt some sadness in being present at that meeting, or it reminded him, as he often was reminded, of the loss during the war of his own brother, Major H. Phillips Fletcher, D.S.O., who had been a Fellow of The Institution for many years.

He was addressing the meeting that night, not as an architect but as a Fellow, by examination, of The Surveyors' Institution. He wished to say how proud he was to be a member, and how much the profession owed to those excellent examinations which had been a feature of The Institution for so many years past. They were extremely practical, and reflected the greatest credit upon The Institution.

He was not going to make any reference to the comprehensive Address given by the President. It was a remarkable Address; it had been delivered in a delightful way, and had carried members through the many and the varied aspects of their great profession. The President had referred to many subjects, upon which he would like to dwell, such as ribbon development, and so on; but wild horses would not drag from him any expression of opinion as to the London bridges.

In conclusion, he desired to say how much he felt the profession had been honoured by the election of Mr. Bedells as President of The Institution, and to wish him every success in directing its affairs during his year of office.

The vote of thanks was then put, and carried with acclamation.

The PRESIDENT, in thanking Mr. Wallis, Mr. Watson, Sir Banister Fletcher, and the meeting, said he had doubted whether the members would endure the length of his Address, but as they had listened to it with equanimity, he considered that on the whole it had probably served its purpose, and would prove, he hoped, the inauguration of a successful session.

It was kind of Sir Banister Fletcher to have attended, for Sir Banister's father and his own had been friends. It would have been a source of great satisfaction to both had they known that in the same year their sons would have the honour of occupying the Presidential Chair of their respective Institutions.

He was very much obliged to Mr. Watson and to all the Junior Members for their kindly thought for himself. The birth of the Junior Meetings was something to which he looked back with unalloyed satisfaction, and anything he could do by way of interest or encouragement for any Junior Member they might be sure he would be only too glad to do.

He desired to thank all present for their reception of his Address, and for the good wishes for his year of office and session ahead.

THE LANDLORD AND TENANT ACT, 1927, IN OPERATION.

By W. E. A. Bull (Professional Associate).

To be read at the Ordinary General Meeting of The Surveyors' Institution on Monday, 9th December, 1929.

The Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, was passed on the 22nd day of December, 1927, and came into operation on the 25th day of March, 1928. It has thus been working for slightly over eighteen months, during which time a number of cases have been decided by the tribunal. Reports, more or less full, of some thirty of these cases have been available to the author, and it is the purpose of this Paper to study the Act anew in the light of these cases and of the practical experience of the working of the Act during its early life.

One thing becomes very noticeable on studying the reported cases, and that is the entire lack of uniformity among the various county courts as to the procedure to be adopted. It was generally thought, and the County Court Rules under the Act certainly appear to contemplate, that proceedings should be brought into the county court in the first instance as a matter of form, and should then, unless there was good reason, such as a material preliminary point of law to be decided, be referred automatically to one of the appointed referees. Instead we find one judge refusing, against the wishes of one of the parties, to refer the matter, and another judge deciding that he had no jurisdiction to hear the matter in the first instance, and that an automatic reference must take place.

Proceedings under the Act are of two kinds: the first comprises actions for compensation for improvements, actions for compensation for goodwill, actions for a new lease in lieu thereof, and actions by mesne landlords under Section 5. These are begun by plaint and summons as in any ordinary county court action, and procedure is governed by Rule 11 of O. 50 s. All other cases are in the nature of applications, are commenced by ordinary summons, and are governed by Rule 23.

Rule 11, so far as material, reads as follows :—

“ Unless the parties shall, within 7 days after the expiration of the time limited for service on the defendant of the plaintiff's defence to counterclaim (if any), file a memorandum that they agree to the matter being determined otherwise, the matter shall stand referred for enquiry and report to one of the panel of referees . . . :

Provided that—

(ii.) a matter shall not be so referred if the judge in his discretion with or without application by either party considers that the matter is more fit to be decided by the court.”

As things stand, the procedure on the return day varies. In some courts neither the parties, their solicitors nor counsel appear, and the matter is automatically referred. In other cases the day fixed for hearing is treated as though it were the day fixed for the trial, and if the judge decides not to refer, the matter is dealt with at once and is disposed of.

This lack of uniformity may result in one of the parties being taken unawares, and it is very desirable that practice should be standardised.

Another feature of the early working of the Act is the apparent indifference, possibly through ignorance, of many parties whose interests are affected. It is still not uncommon for a tenant who wishes to make an improvement contrary to the terms of his lease to apply for a licence, and to accept one which requires reinstatement at the end of the term, even where the improvement is calculated to add to the letting value. Again, cases have occurred where tenants have allowed the time limited for the service of a notice claiming a new lease to expire without even enquiring whether a renewal would be considered, and have subsequently negotiated a new lease. It cannot be too strongly impressed upon tenants that they should approach their landlords in good time, and that, if an amicable settlement cannot be reached, they should serve a notice, under Sections 4 or 5, three years rather than one year before the expiration of the existing tenancy. Any tenant who fails to take early advice as to his position will only have himself to blame if he is unable to claim the protection of the Act.

On the other side, too, the Act does not seem to have affected the prices obtainable for commercial properties subject to short occupational tenancies. It was suggested that possible claims by sitting tenants might have such an effect, but so far no noticeable fall in values has taken place. It is, however, early days for such results.

So much by way of a preliminary. It is proposed now to consider the provisions of the Act under a series of general headings, covering the points raised by case law and experience, but without attempting an exhaustive treatise.

Notices.

Since the exercise of any of the rights conferred by Part I. of the Act must be preceded by a claim or notice, it is first proposed to consider generally the pertinent stipulations in the Act or the County Court Rules under the Act.

Section 23, Sub-section (1), lays down that "any notice, request, demand or other instrument under this Act shall be in writing, and may be served on the person on whom it is to be served either personally or by leaving it for him at his last known place of abode in England or Wales, or by sending it through the post in a registered letter addressed to him there, or, in the case of a local or public authority or a statutory or a public utility company, to the secretary or other proper officer at the “ principal office of such authority or company, and in the “ case of a notice to a landlord, the person on whom it is “ to be served shall include any agent of the landlord duly “ authorised in that behalf.”

This sub-section is clear, but it should be particularly observed that if the tenant is serving a notice on the agent of the landlord it must either be served personally or by registered letter addressed to his place of abode (unless the agent is a company). A notice sent by post to the agent's office will not be a good notice, as appears to have been held by the judge in MacFisheries v. Edwards (an unreported county court decision referred to in Law Times, 8th June, 1929). In this case, however, the learned judge held that he had the power to extend the time within which the notice was to be served, and accordingly purported to do so. It is, however, submitted that the learned judge was wrong, and that neither Section 22 of the Act nor Rule 14 (3) of the County Court Rules confers such a power. Section 22 provides: “ Where in any proceedings under this Act the “ tribunal has fixed or allowed any period for the doing of “ any act or thing, the tribunal may, on an application being “ made by any party to the proceeding, either before or after “ the expiration of the period so allowed, extend that period.” A notice is preliminary to, and not part of, “ proceedings ” under the Act, and power under this section can only be exercised after proceedings have been commenced. Moreover, the section refers only to periods fixed by the tribunal and not to those fixed once and for all by the Act.

Rule 14 (3) reads :—

“ The registrar may at any time report to the judge in relation to any such application (i.e., an application to the county court for directions), and the judge may thereupon give or forward by post to the registrar such directions in writing as may be necessary, including an order for the extension of any time limited for the doing of any act or thing provided for by the Act or this order.”

At first sight this rule would seem to convey the necessary power, but it was held by the Divisional Court in Donegal Tweed Company, Limited, v. Stephenson (45 T.L.R., 503 ; E.G., 8th June, 1929) that it was not the intention of the Rule Committee to alter any of the times fixed by the statute, and that if such was their intention the rule was to that extent ultra vires. It will be seen, therefore, that all notices must be strictly served within the prescribed time limits, and that a notice out of time will be wholly bad and cannot be extended so as to become good.

As to the form of notices (as distinct from claims) no particular form is laid down, and provided it is in writing signed by the party giving it or his agent that is sufficient.

With regard to claims, however, Rule 2 (1) lays down—

“(1) A claim under the Act for compensation in respect of any improvement or for goodwill or for a new lease in lieu of compensation for goodwill or by a mesne landlord under Section 8 (1) of the Act shall be made in writing signed by the claimant, his solicitor or agent, and shall state the name and address of the claimant and of the landlord against whom the claim is made, and shall contain—

“(a) a description of the holding in respect of which the claim arises and of the trade of business carried on upon the holding ;

“(b) a concise statement of the nature of the claim ;

“(c) if the claim arises in respect of an improvement, particulars of the improvement including the date whereon the improvement was completed and the cost thereof ; and

“(d) if compensation is claimed, a statement of the amount claimed.”

The language of the above rule is imperative, and it is thought that if the claim is not strictly in the prescribed form it will be held bad. There may be one exception. The author suggests that a distinction may exist between claims for compensation for improvements and goodwill on the one hand, and a claim for a new lease in lieu of compensation on the other. Section 21, Sub-section (5), says "rules "may be made for regulating proceedings under this section," that is, proceedings before the tribunal. Claims (which must not be confused with the "particulars of claim" to be served with the county court summons when proceedings are begun) are preliminary to, and are not part of, proceedings. The section will not therefore apply to them. Again, Sections 1 and 4 (Improvements and Goodwill) lay down that claims are to be in the "prescribed" form, but Section 5 (New Lease) does not contain the word "prescribed" (which word is defined in Section 25 as meaning prescribed by the County Court or High Court Rules). Thus, though it would be prudent to conform to Rule 2 (1) (supra) when claiming a new lease, the notice may not necessarily be bad if it does not do so. This may have been in the mind of Mr. Justice Talbot, who, though holding a notice claiming a new lease bad on other grounds, said, in D. R. Evans, Limited, v. Coleman (Architects' J., 18th Sept., 1929), that there was no particular form of notice prescribed under the Act.

The case of Dobbin v. Ogden (45 T.L.R., 349; E.G., 19th January and 23rd March, 1929), though no longer of great importance, is interesting. It will be remembered that the Act came into force on Sunday, 25th March, 1927. In this case the tenancy would have expired by effluxion of time on the 25th March, 1928, and since a claim for a new lease must be served not later than 12 months before the termination of the tenancy, the Sunday on which the Act came into force seemed to be the only day on which service could take place. In fact, the notice was given on Saturday, 24th March, 1927. The Court of Appeal, reversing the decisions of the Divisional Court and the tribunal, held that the notice was good.

The following sets out in tabulated form the various notices, claims, &c., which may be served under Part I., together with the time limits laid down.

Matter to which notice relates.	By whom served.	Applicable Section.	Time limit.
Notice of intention to make improvement accompanied by plan and specification	Tenant	Sec. 3, sub-sec. (1)	—
Objection to proposed improvement	Landlord	Sec. 3, sub-sec. (1)	Within 3 months from service of tenant's notice.
Notice offering to execute improvement in consideration of reasonable increase in rent	Landlord	Sec. 3, sub-sec. (1)	At any time before tribunal certifies improvement as proper.
Notice claiming compensation in respect of an improvement	Tenant	Sec. 1, sub-sec. (1) (a) and (b)	Where tenancy determined by notice, within 1 month of service of notice on or by tenant. In any other case not more than 36 nor less than 12 months before termination of tenancy.
Notice offering new tenancy	Landlord	Sec. 2, sub-sec. (1) (d)	Within 2 months of service of tenant's claim for compensation.
Acceptance of such offer by tenant	Tenant	Sec. 2, sub-sec. (1) (d)	Within 1 month of service of landlord's offer.
Certificate by landlord that improvement duly executed	Landlord	Sec. 3, sub-sec. (6)	To be furnished within 1 month of receipt of request by tenant, failing which, tenant can apply to the tribunal.
Claim for compensation for goodwill	Tenant	Sec. 4, sub-sec. (1) (i.) and (ii.)	Tenancy determined by notice, within 1 month after service of notice by landlord. Any other case, not more than 36 nor less than 12 months before termination of tenancy.

	Matter to which notice relates.	By whom served.	Applicable Section.	Time limit.
GOODWILL.	Offer of renewal of tenancy	Landlord	Sec. 4, sub-sec. (1) (b)	Within 2 months of service of tenant's claim.
	Acceptance of such offer by tenant	Tenant	Sec. 4, sub-sec. (1) (b)	Within 1 month of service of offer by landlord.
	Offer of alternative accommodation	Landlord	Sec. 6	Within 1 month of service of tenant's claim.
NEW LEASE.	Notice claiming new lease	Tenant	Sec. 5, sub-sec. (1)	As for claim for goodwill. Further, application to tribunal to determine claim must be made not less than 9 months before termination of tenancy, or, where determined by notice, within 2 months after service of notice.
	Offer of alternative accommodation	Landlord	Sec. 6	Within 1 month after service of notice claiming new lease.
	Offer by landlord to sell his interest to tenant	Landlord	Sec. 5, sub-sec. (7)	At any time before tribunal determines tenant's claim.
MESNE LANDLORDS.	Any claim for compensation by mesne landlord	Mesne Landlord	Sec. 8 and Rule 2 (2) of O. L. B	Not less than 2 months before termination of mesne landlord's tenancy.
	Copy of a notice served by a tenant on a mesne landlord claiming a new lease must be served on latter's superior landlord	Mesne Landlord	Sec. 5, sub-sec. (9)	To be served "forthwith." If tenant suffers loss due to mesne landlord's delay, latter must make loss good.
	Copies of all documents served on a mesne landlord by a tenant must be served on latter's superior landlord if mesne landlord is to be entitled to compensation	Mesne Landlord	Sec. 8, sub-sec. (1), and Rule 4 of O. L. B	To be served "forthwith."

Improvements.

The provisions of the Act as to improvements are contained in Sections 1, 2, and 3. A tenant wishing to make an improvement must, if he desires to be in a position ultimately to claim compensation, strictly conform to the provisions of Section 3. This section lays down that he must serve upon the landlord notice of his intention to make an improvement, together with a plan and specification. It would seem, however, that where the plan in itself sufficiently describes the improvement, lack of a specification will not necessarily invalidate the notice.—(Baldwin v. Garrett (L.J., 3rd November, 1928).)

If within three months from the service of the notice the landlord serves notice of objection, the tenant may apply to the tribunal for a certificate that the improvement is a proper improvement. To succeed he must satisfy the tribunal that the improvement—

- (a) is calculated to add to the letting value of the holding at the termination of the tenancy (Sec. 3, sub-sec. 1 (a));
- (b) is reasonable and suitable to the character of the holding (Sec. 3, sub-sec. 1 (b));
- (c) will not diminish the value of any other property belonging to the landlord or any superior landlord (Sec. 3, sub-sec. 1 (c)).

No certificate will be granted if the landlord proves he offered to execute the improvement in consideration of a reasonable increase in rent (Section 3, proviso), nor if the improvement would contravene any restriction imposed for the purposes detailed in the proviso to Section 3, sub-section (4) (a) (b) and (c).

Section 3, sub-section (4), lays down that the provisions of the section shall apply notwithstanding anything in any lease of the premises to the contrary, but the position of a tenant who holds under a lease dated 8th February, 1927, or earlier, is not (if the lease contains absolute covenants against making improvements) clear. Section 9 reads:

" This Part (i.e., Part I.) of this Act shall apply notwithstanding any contract to the contrary, being a contract made at any time after the eighth day of February, 1927" This clearly implies that a contract to the contrary bearing date 8th February, 1927, or earlier, will be valid, and it may be argued that the covenants against improvements in the case we are considering constitute a valid contract to the contrary. The two sections are hard to reconcile, and the point is one that it will probably be necessary for the Courts to decide. Until then a tenant holding under such a lease who serves notice of intention to make an improvement and receives no notice of objection within three months should not assume that he is entitled to proceed with the work or that he will be able to claim compensation at the end of his tenancy.

A tenant who has made a duly authorised improvement will, at the termination of his tenancy or quitting his holding, be entitled to apply to the tribunal for compensation as provided by Sections 1 and 2. The words in italics should be particularly noticed, for it is thought that no proceedings will be successful if instituted before both these events have taken place. A precisely similar provision was contained in Section 1 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908 (now in the 1923 Act), and in Evie v. Harfield Corporation (1922, 2 K.B., 282, at page 287) Scrutton, L.J., said: " As compensation is not due until the end of the tenancy, it seems impossible, if the point is insisted on, to have an arbitration until the sum is due"

Assuming that these conditions obtain, and that the improvement was duly authorised, the tenant to be entitled to compensation must prove that—

- (1) a claim was made in the prescribed manner and within the stipulated time (Sec. 1, sub-sec. (1) (a) and (b));
- (2) the improvement will add to the letting value of the holding (Sec. 1, sub-sec. (1)).

Further, no compensation will be payable if the improvement—

- (a) was made before 25th March, 1928 (Sec. 2, sub-sec. (1) (a)); or
- (b) consists of fixtures which the tenant is by law entitled to remove (Sec. 1, sub-sec. (1)); or
- (c) was made less than three years before the termination of the tenancy (Sec. 2, sub-sec. (1) (c)); or
- (d) was made in pursuance of a statutory obligation (Sec. 2, sub-sec. (1) (b)); or
- (e) was one which the tenant or his predecessors in title were under an obligation to make in pursuance of a contract entered into for valuable consideration, including a building lease (Sec. 2, sub-sec. (1) (b)); or if
- (f) the landlord serves the tenant with a counter-notice offering a renewal of the tenancy as provided by Sec. 2, sub-sec. (1) (d).

The compensation may be reduced or extinguished if—

- (i.) the landlord proves he intends to demolish or alter the premises or use them for a different purpose (Sec. 1, sub-sec. (2));
- (ii.) the tenant received some benefit expressly or impliedly of the improvement (Sec. 2, sub-sec. (3)).

The amount awarded is not to exceed—

- (a) the net addition to the value of the holding as a whole which is the direct result of the improvement (Sec. 1, sub-sec. (1) (a) of the proviso);
- (b) the reasonable cost of executing the improvement at the termination of the tenancy less cost of repairing it if tenant not liable under repairing covenants (Sec. 1, sub-sec. (1) (a) of the proviso).

It has become a common practice where a new lease is granted, and the tenant desires to execute improvements, to make these a consideration for the grant of the lease. It should be noted that Section 2, sub-sec. (1) (b) ((e) above) differs from Section 9 in that it does not stipulate that the consideration should be "adequate" but merely "valuable."

Even so it is doubtful whether such a recital will have the effect of precluding the tenant from claiming compensation in due course. Mr. Foa, in the admirable Memorandum which he prepared for The Institution, expresses the opinion that the consideration must be extrinsic to the lease itself, and that even a real or supposed diminution in rent would not be "valuable consideration" within the section.

With regard to the provision that the improvement must not have been made less than three years before the end of the tenancy, doubts have been expressed as to whether a tenant holding under a succession of leases could claim at the termination of his tenancy in respect of an improvement made less than three years before the termination of a previous lease even though the aggregate of the tenancies considerably exceeded this period. These doubts have been based in part upon the absence from this Act of any such provisions as those in Section 7 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, which lay down that a tenant who has remained in his holding during two or more tenancies shall not be deprived of compensation by reason only that the improvements were not effected during the tenancy on the termination of which he quits the holding.

In Baldwin v. Garrett (L.T., 13th July, 1929) the county court judge held that the three years' stipulation would be complied with at any time if the relationship of landlord and tenant existed, even though the improvement was carried out during the currency of a previous tenancy. In this case the tenant had applied for a certificate that a proposed improvement was a proper improvement, the lease, though having only a few months to run, containing an option, not at the time of the application exercised, for a further lease of three years.

The principle thus laid down will, if followed, also apply to the five years' stipulation as to trading in Section 4.

Goodwill.

A tenant's rights to claim compensation for loss of goodwill are contained in Section 4. Briefly summarised, such a right will accrue at the termination of the tenancy on quitting the holding if—

- (a) a claim was made in the “prescribed” manner within the defined limits of time (Sec. 4, sub-sec. (1) (i.) and (ii.)) ;
- (b) the tenant proves that by reason of his carrying on a trade or business for not less than five years goodwill has become attached to the premises by reason whereof a higher rent could be obtained (Sec. 4, sub-sec. (1)) ;

but no compensation will be payable if—

- (1) the tenant determined the tenancy or failed to exercise a reasonable option (Sec. 4, sub-sec. (1) (f)) ;
- (2) the landlord within one month of receipt of the claim offers a renewal on reasonable terms (Sec. 4, sub-sec. (1) (b)), or offers suitable alternative accommodation on reasonable terms (Sec. 6) ;
- (3) the landlord, being a Government department, local or public authority, charity or a statutory or public utility company require the premises for their own purposes (Sec. 4, sub-sec. (1) (g)) ;
- (4) a reversionary lease has been granted within the terms of Sec. 15, sub-sec. (3) ;

and the compensation may be reduced or extinguished if the landlord intends to demolish the premises or use them for a different and more profitable purpose (Sec. 4, sub-sec. (1) (a)), or if he proves that the goodwill is due to restrictions imposed by him upon other premises belonging to him or under his control (Sec. 4, sub-sec. (1) (e)).

The sum to be paid as compensation is not to exceed the addition to the value of the holding which is the direct result of the tenant's trading (Sec. 4, sub-sec. (1) (a)), and the following rules are laid down to guide the tribunal in assessing this value—

- (i.) in the case of licensed premises any addition due to the value of the licence is to be disregarded (Sec. 4, sub-sec. (1) (c));

(ii.) the tenant's intentions as to trading elsewhere are to be taken into account and restrictions may be imposed (Sec. 4, sub-sec. (1) (d) (i.));

(iii.) any value due exclusively to the position of the premises is to be disregarded (Sec. 4, sub-sec. (1) (d) (ii.)).

Goodwill, it will be observed, is not defined, and this has probably given rise to more discussion than any other point in the Act. Lawyers love a good precedent, and there has been a tendency to examine the definitions of "goodwill" extant and to apply them with modifications to "goodwill" under the Act. Particularly have the dicta in the House of Lords case, Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Muller & Co.'s Margarine, Limited (1901, A.C., 217) been so applied. It is suggested that inasmuch as goodwill under the Act is a very much narrower conception than was considered in that case, great danger arises from adopting such a course, and that it is better to consider the matter afresh guided by the Act itself.

So far, at least, as surveyors are concerned, the author suggests that it is not essential to be clear as to what goodwill is if the effect of it is known, coupled with a clear realisation of what it is not. No scientist knows the nature of electricity, but its effect, under any given set of circumstances can be foretold with exactitude.

Goodwill under the Act must have the effect of increasing the rental value of the property before compensation becomes payable. The following formula may be used to decide whether or not a tenant has a claim under Section 4, which claim is also a first essential to successful proceedings under Section 5:—

- (i.) Decide on the facts of the case whether a higher rent could be obtained for the premises if used for the purposes of the tenant's trade or business than if used for the purpose of any other trade or business.

(ii.) If a higher rent could be so obtained, consider whether it is due in whole or in part—

- (a) to the situation of the premises ;
- (b) to the structural suitability of the premises for the trade in question ;
- (c) to the absence of competition in the particular trade ;
- (d) to restrictions imposed by the landlord ;
- (e) in the case of licensed property, to the licence.

If these factors do not account for the whole of the increased rental value, the balance may be assumed to be due to the goodwill of the tenant. A prima facie case for compensation will then have been established.

When using this formula it must be assumed, unless the contrary is known to be the case, that the tenant cannot obtain other premises within the goodwill-radius of the holding he is quitting. In this way the problem of goodwill due to the personality of the tenant is automatically solved. Such goodwill, in general, will depart with the tenant ; almost certainly it will do so if other premises are obtained within the goodwill-radius. If no such premises are obtainable, and the personality of the tenant is such as will continue to attract custom even after his departure, the increased rental value (if any) resulting therefrom will be automatically the subject of compensation.

In the tests given above increased rental value due to (a), (b), (d) and (e) obviously is the property of the landlord. Case (c) is, perhaps, not so clear. It may be argued that the absence of competition is due to the commanding business built up by the tenant during his tenancy. On the other hand it is generally found that the existence of a flourishing business without competition is an inducement for rivals to come into the district rather than a deterrent. Moreover, such a position cannot be said to be the direct result of the tenant's trading, and goodwill due to it is, it is submitted, too uncertain to be the subject of compensation.

The formula cannot be used in the case of premises suitable for one purpose and one purpose only. Consider the case of an hotel or boarding-house in a district where there is considerable demand for such property but no demand for any other type of business premises. The measure of the tenant's goodwill, then, is not, of course, the difference between the rent obtainable as an hotel and the rent obtainable if the premises could not be so used, but any increase in rental value as an hotel due to the tenant's goodwill. Increases due to situation and special suitability must be discounted in advance.

The next step will be to arrive at the capital value of the increased rental value thus found to be due to the tenant's goodwill. The figure of years' purchase used will, of course, vary with the facts of the particular case, and the following factors should, it is submitted, be borne in mind when choosing a multiplier:—

- (1) The increased annual value, though due to goodwill, has, by hypothesis, become attached to the premises, and therefore partakes of the nature of rent ;
- (2) It is, however, being due to goodwill, of a much less stable character than ordinary rent ;
- (3) The premises should in every case be considered as though of freehold tenure ;
- (4) Other things being equal, the greater the proportion that the increased rental value due to goodwill bears to the normal rental value, the lower should be the multiplier used ;
- (5) The multiplier should vary in sympathy with that which would be used in valuing the normal rack-rental in the particular case.

Suppose that the normal rental value of a particular property is £200, and that it is found that the tenant's goodwill increases the rental value by £20 per annum. If the years' purchase that would be used to value a freehold rent of £200 per annum arising out of the premises were 15, a suitable multiplier to apply to the increased value might be 10.

It will be seen that the business must have been carried on either by the tenant or his predecessors for not less than five years. In the case of a tenancy which will expire by effluxion of time, Section 4 is not clear as to the date from which this period must be computed. A tenant must in such a case make his claim not less than 12 months from the termination of the tenancy, and that it may be argued that all the conditions of the section must be fulfilled at the time of making the claim. On the other hand, the wording of the section “. . . if he proves to the satisfaction of the tribunal that by reason of the carrying on by him . . . of a trade or business for a period of not less than five years . . .” seems to show that the period may be taken from the end of the tenancy, since the matter cannot come before the tribunal until that contingency has occurred. In the case of a claim for a new lease, the matter is further complicated by the necessity in the majority of cases of commencing proceedings before the tenancy has expired.

A point that should be noted is that a tenant must serve his notice claiming compensation within one month from receipt of notice to quit when his tenancy is so determined. This may easily be overlooked where, as sometimes happens, a landlord serves a twelve instead of the usual six months' notice to quit.

The Act lays down no limit of time within which a tenant must commence proceedings to recover compensation. He will presumably, therefore, retain a right of action until statute barred.

Claim for a new Lease.

The provisions of the Act relating to renewals in lieu of compensation are contained in Section 5. Put shortly, the section provides that any tenant who would be entitled to compensation for goodwill under Section 4 may, instead, obtain a renewal of his tenancy for not more than 14 years if he—

- (i.) serves a notice on the landlord (within the same periods as for a claim under Section 4) requiring the grant of a new lease (Sec. 5, sub.-sec. (1)) ;

- (ii.) proves that he is a suitable tenant (Sec 5, sub-sec. (3) (a));
- (iii.) proves that he would be entitled to compensation under Section 4 (Sec. 5, sub-sec. (3) (a));
- (iv.) proves that such compensation would not compensate him for the loss he would suffer (Sec. 5, sub-sec. (3) (a));

and if the tribunal considers that to grant such a lease would in all the circumstances be reasonable. No lease may, however, be granted (where it is the tenant who applies to the tribunal) if the landlord proves any one of the following:—

- (i.) That he requires the premises for occupation by himself, or by a son or daughter over 18 (Sec. 5, sub-sec. (3) (b));
- (ii.) That he intends to pull down or remodel the premises (Sec. 5, sub-sec. (3) (b));
- (iii.) That he requires possession to carry out a redevelopment scheme (Sec. 5, sub-sec. (3) (b));
- (iv.) That to grant such a lease would not be consistent with good estate management (Sec. 5, sub-sec. (3) (b)).

Nor in any case may a lease be granted if the landlord offers to sell his interest to the tenant such interest being, in the opinion of the tribunal, of sufficient duration (Sec. 5, sub-sec. (7)), or offers suitable alternative accommodation at a reasonable rent (Sec. 6).

The application to the tribunal to determine the claim must be made, either by the tenant, or the landlord, not less than nine months before the termination of the tenancy, or if the tenancy was determined by notice, within two months after service (Sec. 5, sub-sec. (2)).

If it be held that the five years' condition as to trading in Section 4 must be satisfied at the time the matter comes before the tribunal, it follows that, in the case of a tenancy determined by effluxion of time, the business will have been carried on for at least five years and nine months when the tenancy does so expire.

The burden of proving the facts enumerated above, except the service of notice of claim, would seem to be thrown on the tenant only if he is the applicant. In the same way the above statutory defences of a landlord are only absolute if the tenant is the applicant. If it is the landlord who applies, the whole of Section 5, sub-sec. (3), becomes inapplicable, and the main issue would seem to be whether or not the grant of a renewal would be reasonable.

If the grant of a renewal is refused on any of the grounds in sub-sec. (3) (b) (supra), the section specifically lays down that the tribunal may award compensation instead. This at once raises the much-debated question whether compensation can be awarded in any other case, i.e., whether an alternative claim will be valid.

If the tenant does not claim compensation, it is certain (except, perhaps, where a renewal is refused on any of the grounds in Section 5, sub-sec. (3) (b)), that he will not be able to recover any, and it is even doubtful, owing to the obscurity of the wording of sub-sec. (1), whether he will then be entitled to a new lease.

The sub-section reads as follows :—

“ Where the tenant alleges that, though he would be entitled to compensation under the last foregoing section the sum which could be awarded to him under that section would not compensate him for the loss of goodwill he will suffer if he removes to and carries on his trade or business in other premises, he may in lieu of claiming such compensation, at any time within the period allowed for making a claim under the said section, serve on the landlord notice requiring a new lease of the premises at which the trade or business is carried on to be granted to him.”

A tenant is not entitled to a new lease unless he is entitled to compensation ; he is not entitled to compensation unless he has served the requisite notice claiming it. If the section read “ Where the tenant alleges that, though he “ would be entitled to compensation under the last foregoing “ section were he to claim it within the period allowed by the

"said section . . .," this point would be clear, and perhaps the section must be read as though the words in italics were inserted. However this may be, if the section is strictly construed, it would appear that the tenant must elect to claim either compensation or a new lease. If he chooses the latter, and proves he would be entitled to compensation but fails to show this would not adequately recompense him, it might seem that he will then fail to get even the compensation to which he would have been entitled. This construction seems to be strengthened by the words of sub-section (3) (b) referred to above, for on the principle expressio unius, if the Legislature specifies compensation in certain cases of failure to obtain a new lease, they may be assumed to have excluded the right in other cases.

Again, in the case of a claim for a new lease where the old tenancy is expiring by effluxion of time, the matter must be brought before the tribunal during the currency of this tenancy. Compensation for goodwill, on the other hand, is not payable until the termination of the tenancy, and, as already considered, no cause of action can arise before. On this ground alone it might be thought the tribunal would be precluded from awarding compensation except as provided by sub-section (3) (b).

Where the tenancy is determined by notice the matter is clearer still. The tenant by Section 5, sub-sec. (1), must serve his notice claiming a new lease within one month after receipt of notice to quit. Suppose he also claims compensation. By the same sub-section application to the tribunal to hear the case must be made within two months after the service of "the notice" (which presumably means the notice to quit). By Rule 5 (4) of O. 50 B, no proceedings to recover compensation may be commenced until after the expiration of two months from the date on which the claim was served on the defendant. The tenant, therefore, must by the Act bring proceedings to obtain his lease within two months, and may not by the County Court Rules commence proceedings to recover compensation until after two months have expired. Even if the two months within which he must commence proceedings could be held to date from the time of the service of his notice of claim instead of from the date of the service of the notice to quit, the position will not be altered. If the Legislature intended that alternative claims should be permissible this is a decidedly Gilbertian situation, though it is not one likely to strike the tenant as humorous.

As the matter stands at the moment, however, the County Court judgment in the case of Murray's Pharmacies, Limited, v. Briggs (E.G., 24th November, 1928) decides that alternative claims are admissible. At the conclusion of his judgment His Honour Judge Woodcock said: "It is "unfortunate that the wording of the Act is 'he may, " 'in lieu of claiming such compensation.' The wording "would have been more apt if it had said that 'he may " 'claim in lieu of such compensation.' That is the form in "which I think it ought to have been drafted. But I am "not here to re-draft it, but to try to arrive at a reasonable "interpretation of it. I must interpret it, having regard to "the utterly unreasonable result which would obtain if I "interpret it in any other way, that he may claim in lieu of "such compensation. Therefore I hold that it is a proper "course under this Act to make these two claims in the "alternative."

There it rests for the present, and even though the learned judge does not seem to have had put before him all the points we have considered above, the decision is, at any rate, a common-sense one. It can, however, only be a matter of time before the higher Courts give a ruling.

It may be useful to give a form applicable to an alternative claim under this section. The following is taken, with acknowledgements, from an article in the Law Times of 9th February, 1929:—

"I hereby give you notice that I..... claim to be entitled under Section 4 of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1927 at the termination of my tenancy of..... on the.....day of.....on quitting the said premises for compensation for goodwill which has become attached to the said premises by reason of the carrying on by me at the said premises of the trade or business of.....for the period of more than five years by reason whereof the premises could be let at a higher rent than would have been obtainable had such goodwill not been attached thereto but that inasmuch as the sum that might be awarded under the said Act in respect of such compensation would not compensate me for the loss of goodwill I shall suffer if I remove to and carry on the said trade or business elsewhere, I hereby in lieu of such compensation require a new lease of the said premises to be granted to me in accordance with Section 5 of the aforesaid Act and I further give you notice hereby that in the event of a new lease of the said premises not being granted to me I hereby claim to be entitled to £.....as compensation for the goodwill aforesaid."

A number of cases in which a new lease has been claimed have been considered by the tribunal, but it is doubtful whether these form a reliable guide to the probable results of future proceedings. In many cases the tenant has failed, but from a study of the available reports it has frequently appeared that where he has been successful this result has been due to a misunderstanding of the nature of goodwill, and to the defence, in consequence, being conducted on lines which experience will probably prove to have been unwise. In the author's opinion a tenant has a difficult task to establish a valid claim to compensation for goodwill; but provided he is making a profit, it would seem that the worse the trading position the property occupies, the greater his chance of success. This somewhat curious result is due to obviously great influence upon rental values exerted by the situation of the property, and the greater this influence becomes, the less likely is the tenant's goodwill to affect the rent obtainable. Most surveyors will, I think, agree that in first-class trading positions at least as high a rent could, in general, be obtained from several different sources as could be got from an attempt to utilise the tenant's goodwill by letting to a trade similar to his. In these positions it is frequently found that a multiple company will pay a heavy price for the lease and goodwill of a trader whose business is quite different from their own.

A few points under this heading still remain to be considered. The tribunal is given no indication as to what circumstances should influence it in fixing the length of a new lease under the section, except that such lease must not exceed 14 years. In Wolff v. Swift the judge refused to order the grant of a lease for more than 7 years, on the ground that values in the district (the premises were in Lord Street, Liverpool) appeared to be advancing rapidly.

It should be noted that if the tribunal is precluded from granting a new lease under Section 5, sub-section (3) (b), it may make it a condition that the landlord shall carry out his declared intention within a certain time, and that, if he fails to do so, he shall pay such compensation as will represent the loss the tenant will suffer by reason of such refusal,—a very different basis of compensation to that provided under Section 4.

If a landlord proves that though he does not require possession under sub-section (3) (b) at once, he will so require within a certain period the lease shall not extend beyond that period unless it is made subject to determination by the landlord on six months' notice at any time after the expiration of that period (sub-sec. (4)). Note that this sub-section does not provide for any compensation to be paid if the landlord exercises his right to resume possession. Suppose that the landlord proved that he had a son 16 years of age, and that he would require the premises for him when he was 18. The tribunal could not grant a longer lease than for two years except subject to such a provision, and the tenant would get no compensation when the landlord resumed possession except in the unlikely event of his being able to prove he had, during the interim, attached further goodwill to the holding as provided by Section 5, sub-sec. (8).

The landlord may also require that any lease granted under Section 5 shall contain a condition that if at any time after the expiration of seven years he requires possession for redevelopment, he may determine the lease on giving the tenant 12 months' notice and satisfying the tribunal that his intentions are bonâ fide (sub-sec. (5)). In this case, however, he must pay as compensation such a sum as will represent the value of the unexpired portion of the lease,—yet another basis of compensation.

The case of Stumbles v. Whitley (45 T.L.R., 517; E.G., 8th June, 1929), in which the meaning of the word “premises” in Section 5 was considered, is interesting. In that case the tenant claimed a new lease of an hotel, with which were demised by the existing lease certain incorporeal rights, being rights of fishing in adjacent water. The referee to whom the case went reported that a new lease should be granted of the whole of the premises, including the fishing rights. The county court judge decided, however, that the words in Section 5, “premises in which the trade or business “is carried on,” did not include incorporeal rights over other property. On appeal the Divisional Court reversed this finding, and held that the new lease must include whatever was demised by the old.

It was mentioned earlier that a tenant would be unable to recover compensation for goodwill (and therefore could not obtain a new lease) if the landlord had granted a reversionary lease in certain circumstances. Section 15, sub-sec. (3), reads: “Where a landlord who would have been “liable to pay compensation for goodwill . . . had, before “the thirty-first day of March, nineteen hundred and “twenty-seven, granted or agreed to grant a reversionary “lease commencing on or after the termination of the then “existing tenancy, the landlord shall not be liable to pay “compensation . . . for goodwill”

That section was, it is thought, intended to protect a landlord who had granted a reversionary lease to a third party before he could have known of the pending legislation. In Perkins v. B.D.C., Limited (E.G., 9th and 23rd February, 1929), it was held that no compensation would be payable if a reversionary lease had been granted before the 31st March, 1927, to the tenant himself. Suppose that a tenant claims compensation in 1930 for goodwill created during the currency of a 21 years' lease granted in 1910. By this ruling, if the lease had, in 1910, been granted in reversion, the tenant would have no claim. Although in the above case the learned judge by implication ruled otherwise, might not the words "the then existing tenancy" in Section 15, sub-sec. (3) (supra), be interpreted as meaning the tenancy existing on 31st March, 1927 ?

Mesne Landlords.

It is most important that any intermediate landlord who receives any claim or notice from a tenant should at once serve copies on his superior landlord. Failure to do so may involve him in serious liabilities.

The various notices affecting such a landlord are set out in the table on page 42.

Contracting out.

This will be considered separately as to Parts I. and II. of the Act.

PART I.

The material section is Section 9. This reads :—

" This Part of this Act shall apply notwithstanding any contract to the contrary being a contract made at any time after the eighth day of February, 1927 :

Provided that, if on the hearing of a claim or application under this Part of this Act it appears to the tribunal that a contract made after such date as aforesaid, so far as it deprives any person of any right under this Part of this Act, was made for adequate consideration, the tribunal shall in determining the matter give effect thereto."

It will be seen, therefore, that—

- (i.) a contract to the contrary hearing date 8th February, 1927, or earlier will be valid ;
- (ii.) a contract after that date will only be valid if made for adequate consideration.

The consideration must be adequate. If a tenant purports to contract out of the Act for a consideration, it will, nevertheless, be competent for him to assert at a later date that the consideration was not adequate and the contract therefore void. In determining the matter the tribunal will presumably weigh, on the one hand, the value of the rights purported to be abandoned, and, on the other hand, the value of the consideration given. If the last does not equal or exceed the first, the consideration may not be held adequate.

The position may be complicated by a recital in the contract that the consideration is adequate. In general a party to a deed is estopped from denying the accuracy of any statement of fact contained therein. There are, however, exceptions. One is where fraud is alleged; another exception is based upon the decision in Carpenter v. Butler (8 M. & W., 209, 219). In this case Baron Parke said: "If a distinct statement of a particular fact is made in a recital of a bond or other instrument under seal, and a contract is made with reference to that recital, it is unquestionably true that, as between the parties to that instrument and in an action upon it, it is not competent for the party bound to deny that recital But there is no authority to show that a party to the instrument would be estopped in an action by the other party not founded on the deed, and wholly collateral to it, to dispute the fact so admitted, though the recitals would certainly be evidence."

If it be held that an action for Compensation under the Act is collateral to the deed, there would seem to be nothing, in view of the above, to prevent a tenant from denying the adequacy of the compensation.

If a lease does contain a recital contracting out of the Act for a consideration, it would be advisable for a certificate to be appended to the lease, signed by valuers appointed by each party, to the effect that the consideration had been assessed by them and was, in their view, adequate.

Renewals are frequently arranged amicably in order to avoid the prosecution by the tenant of a claim for compensation under Section 4, and it would certainly be advisable for a landlord to see that any such lease recites that it has been granted in lieu of such compensation or of any lease which the tenant might have obtained under Section 5. This will prevent a further claim for compensation for goodwill or for a new lease later on (Sec. 5, sub-sec. (8)).

PART II.

Leaving out of consideration Section 20 (which is of limited application), all the provisions of this Part of this Act, with the exception of those in Section 18, sub-sec. (1), contain, either in the section itself or in a section in another Act associated therewith, such words as "notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary."

No contract contrary to these provisions will therefore be valid in any circumstances.

Section 18, sub-sec. (1), however, contains no such stipulation. This sub-section deals with, and alters the law as to, the measure of damages for breaches of covenants to keep or leave in repair. It will therefore presumably be competent for lessor and lessee to agree on some other basis for arriving at the measure of damages resulting from such a breach provided that the basis agreed on is in the nature of liquidated damages and is not a penalty. A stipulation, for instance, that at the termination of the lease the lessee shall pay to the lessor such a sum as will represent the cost of putting the premises into a state consistent with the repairing covenants would seem to be valid.

Statutory Tenants.

It is by no means certain whether the Act applies to a statutory tenancy. The Legislature apparently contemplated that it would so apply, for Section 16, which deals with the rights of a landlord to recover increased rates and taxes due to the execution of an improvement by the tenant, says that such sums shall be recoverable "anything to the contrary in the Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Acts, 1920 to 1925, contained notwithstanding."

For a full consideration of the matter reference should be made to the Memorandum by Mr. Hollis A. Crook, published in the Estates Gazette on the 27th of November, 1928. Mr. Crook's main argument, based on the judgment of Bankes, L.S., in C. Keeves v. Dean and Nunn v. Pellegrini (1924, 1 K.B.), is that as a statutory tenant does not occupy under a contract of tenancy, the definition of "tenant" in the Act as "any person entitled in possession "to the holding under any contract of tenancy" cannot apply to and must exclude a statutory tenant.

Even if the Act does apply to such tenants, it is difficult to see how they can take advantage of its provisions except as to improvements in case (b) below. Statutory tenancies can only be determined by—

- (a) The protecting Acts expiring or being repealed;
- (b) Notice by the tenant;
- (c) Order of the Court.

In case (a) the claim would have to have been made 12 months earlier; in case (b) the tenant cannot claim compensation except for improvements; in case (c) the tenancy will not have been determined by notice, and, again, the claim should have been made 12 months before.

Part II. of the Act.

This Part consists of three sections—18, 19, and 20. Section 20 is of limited application, and deals with apportionment of rents under the Inclosure Act, 1854. It will not be considered further here.

The first two sections deal with the following matters:—

- (1) Measure of damages for breach of repairing covenants (Sec. 18, sub.-sec. (1));
- (2) Forfeiture of leases for breaches of covenants to repair (Sec. 18, sub.-sec. (2));
- (3) Covenants against assigning underletting or parting with possession without licence or consent (Sec. 19, sub.-sec. (1));
- (4) Covenants against making improvements without licence or consent (Sec. 19, sub.-sec. (2));
- (5) Covenants against alteration of user without licence or consent (Sec. 19, sub.-sec. (3)).

Contracting out of this Part of the Act has been considered separately.

1. The law as it stood before the passing of the Act distinguished between damages for breach of a covenant to keep premises in repair and to yield up in repair. In the former case the measure of damages was the injury to the reversion; in the latter the cost of putting the premises into repair consistent with the covenant. Section 18, sub-sec. (1), provides that in all cases the measure of damages shall be the injury to the reversion, and, further, that no damages shall be recovered for breach of a covenant to yield up in repair if the premises are to be pulled down or so altered as to render the repairs valueless.

In the ordinary way, probably, the measure of damage to the reversion for breach of a covenant to yield up in repair will still be the cost of executing the repairs required by the covenants. It will not always be so, however. For instance, suppose there is a covenant to yield up in accordance with repairing covenants which provide that the premises shall be redecorated throughout in the last year of the term. Suppose, further, that the lessee redecorated 15 months prior to the termination of the lease, and that the premises as yielded up are in good condition. In such a case the measure of damages to the reversion is unlikely to be held to be the cost of redecoration again throughout.

2. Sec. 18, sub-section (2), provides that before a landlord can enforce a right of re-entry or forfeiture for breach of a covenant to repair he must prove that the service of such a notice as is required by Section 146 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, was known to either—

- (a) the lessee; or
- (b) to an under-lessee holding under an under-lease which reserved a nominal reversion only to the lessee; or
- (c) to the person who last paid the rent due under the lease either on his own behalf or as agent for the lessee or under-lessee.

In the case of a freeholder entitled in reversion to property let to weekly tenants, it will no longer be good service to leave the notice on the property unless, at the same time, the fact of such service is brought to the attention of one of the persons above enumerated.

It should be noted that the sub-section only applies to the service of notices of breaches of covenants to repair and not to breaches of other covenants.

3. Section 19, sub-sec. (1), provides that in all leases, whether made before or after the passing of the Act, which contain a covenant against assigning, underletting, charging or parting with possession of demised premises or any part thereof without licence or consent, such covenant shall be deemed to be subject to a proviso that such licence or consent shall not be unreasonably withheld.

In future, therefore, a tenant who has applied for permission to assign or sub-let may, if the landlord unreasonably refuses consent, proceed without such consent. He must, however, first ask the landlord's permission unless his lease was originally granted for more than forty years, and in consideration of the erection or substantial improvement of buildings. In this case it will be sufficient if he gives the landlord notice of the transaction within six months after it is effected (Section 19, sub-sec. (1) (b)).

He might, instead of taking the law into his own hands and thereby incurring the burden of proving, should the landlord take proceedings, that the latter's action was unreasonable, apply to the court for a declaration that the landlord was not entitled to withhold consent. In a case before the passing of the Act, West v. Gwynne (1911, 2 Ch., 1), where the lease contained a covenant not to assign, &c., without the consent of the landlord, such consent not to be unreasonably withheld, the tenant sought such a declaration and succeeded. The court allowed him costs, overruling a previous decision in which costs were not allowed on the ground that his proper course was to assign and leave the landlord to his remedy.

Though the section is retrospective to the extent that it will apply to leases granted before the passing of the Act, it was decided in Gardiner v. Cone (1928, 1 Ch., 955; L.J., 29th Sept., 1928) that its aid cannot be invoked to legalise a breach committed prior to 25th March, 1927.

In this case the landlords brought an action for forfeiture, on the ground that the tenants had assigned the lease of licensed premises without consent; the defendants pleaded (inter alia) that the landlords had unreasonably withheld their consent, and that Section 19, sub-sec. (1), applied. Held, that the section did not apply as the assignment took place prior to the Act coming into force. The principle thus established would apply also to sub-sections (2) and (3) of Section 19.

Another case of interest was Murr v. Dewhurst (E.G., 9th March, 1929; Sol. J., 13th April, 1929). Here a tenant of a boarding-house, finding that the business was being run at a loss, found another person willing to take on the premises and to pay £400 for doing so. He approached the landlord, who agreed to accept the new tenant in consideration of £50, and did so, releasing the old tenant from his obligations and granting a new lease to his substitute. The tenant subsequently brought an action to recover the £50 on the ground that Section 19, sub-section (1), applied, and that it was unreasonable of the landlord to refuse consent except on payment of a consideration. Held that the section did not apply, since the landlord had accepted a surrender from the tenant, who had, therefore, neither assigned nor underlet; further, that even if he had assigned or underlet and the section had applied, a sum of money paid to secure the landlord's consent could not afterwards be recovered unless, perhaps, the money had been paid "under protest." This follows the principle laid down by the Court of Appeal in Andrews v. Bridgeman (1908, 1 K.B., 596), where it was held that the effect of Section 3 of the Conveyancing Act of 1892 (which provided that covenants against assigning, &c., were to be deemed to be subject to a proviso that no fine should be payable for consent) was not to make the payment of a fine illegal, but merely to read into the contract between the parties a proviso that no such payment should be made, leaving the parties free subsequently to vary their contract if they so agreed. Here, again, the principle will apply to sub-sections (2) and (3).

It is thought that this and the following sub-sections will not apply to covenants drawn in absolute terms. The point is considered in detail when discussing sub-section (2).

4. Section 19, sub-sec. (2), provides that in all leases containing a covenant against making improvements without consent a proviso shall be imported that such consent is not to be unreasonably withheld. The landlord may, however, require, as a condition of his consent, that a reasonable sum shall be paid in respect of any damage to or diminution in the value of the premises or any other premises belonging to him caused by the improvement, together with legal or other expenses properly incurred, and, if the improvement is not one adding to the letting value of the holding, he may require that the tenant shall undertake to reinstate the premises in their former condition.

“Improvement” here evidently means an improvement from the tenant’s point of view, and the landlord would apparently not be entitled to withhold his consent to an alteration or addition simply because it did not increase the value of the holding in the open market. If the “improvement” actually decreased the market value, presumably it would be reasonable for the landlord to withhold his consent, for I do not think it would be held that the section forced the landlord to agree to any alteration, however detrimental, and to accept a sum of money as compensation. Each case will have to be decided on its own merits, the criterion being whether or not a refusal is, in the circumstances, reasonable.

The point as to whether the sub-sections of Section 19 apply to covenants drawn in absolute terms has already been mentioned. It has been suggested that they will not do so, and this view appears to have been accepted by Mr. Justice Rowlett in Lilley & Skinner v. Crump (E.G., 4th May, 1929).

In this case the lessees claimed a declaration that the lessor was not entitled to withhold her consent to the making of certain apertures in the party-wall dividing the demised premises from the adjoining property. The lease contained a covenant, unqualified in any way, against cutting or maiming the main walls, and also a covenant against making alterations without consent. The judge appears to have considered he would have been precluded from granting the declaration sought if the absolute covenant against cutting the main walls had applied, but held that the proposed work was an alteration within the meaning of the second covenant, that Section 19, sub-sec. (2), accordingly applied, and granted the declaration subject to the lessor's right to insist on reinstatement at the end of the term.

5. Section 19, sub-sec. (3), lays down that all covenants against alteration of user without consent shall be deemed subject to a proviso that no fine or sum of money in the nature of a fine shall be payable in respect of such consent, provided that the proposed change of user will not involve structural alterations. The landlord may, however, require compensation for any damage that will be occasioned (whether to the demised or to neighbouring premises belonging to him), and is entitled to his proper legal or other expenses.

If the landlord offers to consent, subject to the payment of a fine, he would probably, in an action by the tenant, be forced to give his consent without a fine (unless the sum demanded falls within the last part of the sub-section). If, however, the landlord merely refuses his consent without giving reasons, and the tenant pays a sum of money to obtain a licence, this, as we have seen, will not afterwards be recoverable.

It should be noted that Section 19 (paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 above) does not apply to agricultural holdings nor, except sub-sec. (1) (a), to mining leases.

Part III. of the Act.

This Part of the Act deals with the tribunal, the application of the Act to Crown, Duchy, Ecclesiastical, and charity lands, and various miscellaneous matters of which several have been considered elsewhere in this Paper. Two points not so mentioned may be worthy of note.

Section 21, sub-sec. (4), lays down that not more than one expert witness on either side shall be heard before the referee unless it is otherwise directed, but it has been held that this limitation does not apply to proceedings before the judge.

Section 21, sub-sec. (8), provides that any matter under the Act to be determined by the tribunal may, instead, be referred to arbitration.

In conclusion the much-quoted remark of a famous Law Lord to the effect that the Act would apply to 2,000,000 properties and would result in 2,000,000 lawsuits may be cited if only in order to disagree with it. The tendency of the Act has been to bring landlord and tenant closer together; they are settling their differences amicably whenever they can. If the working of the Town Tenants (Ireland) Act, 1906, is any criterion, they will continue to do so.

This Act gives tenants the right to claim compensation for improvements and for disturbance: Part I. of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, was largely based upon its provisions.

The Report of the Departmental Committee appointed to enquire into the working of the Law of Landlord and Tenant in the case of Non-Agricultural Holdings in Northern Ireland has just been issued, and one paragraph, referring to this Act reads: "The fact is that singularly few claims for compensation under it have been brought into Court, and there is a rather surprising ignorance of its provisions . . . At the present day it is a rarity to hear of a claim being the subject of litigation. It must not, however, be inferred from this that the Act has proved a failure or is now a dead letter. Our opinion . . . is that the Act in its application has conferred very real benefits on tenants without putting them to the expense and inconvenience of having to resort to litigation to any appreciable extent, and we think that on the whole it has operated beneficially as between landlords and tenants." The Committee also state that so far as they can trace in the 22 years the Act has been working, only 125 claims have been brought into court. That is, indeed, a happy augury for the future of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927.

TRANSACTIONS

SURVEYORS' INSTITUTION

SESSION 1928-1929.

AT THE ORDINARY GENERAL MEETING

Held on Monday, 9th December, 1929.

Mr. G. TURVILLE BROWN (Vice-President) in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN expressed his regret that the President (Mr. C. H. Bedells) was unable to preside at the meeting, as his doctor had advised him not to go out that evening. Happily, Mr. Bedells was not seriously ill.

NEW MEMBERS.

The following new Members were presented by the CHAIRMAN for formal admission to membership under Bye-law 21, and signed the Register:—

THE LANDLORD AND TENANT ACT, 1927, IN OPERATION.

Sir PHILIP PILDITCH, M.P. (Fellow), in proposing a vote of thanks to the author, said all present must feel very much indebted to Mr. Bull for the industry with which he had collected and presented the information upon his subject.

He had asked Mr. Bull a moment or two previously what his age was. This was perhaps rather a rude question, but he had done it for a special reason. At exactly Mr. Bull's present age he (the speaker) had read his first Paper before The Institution. It was a long and complicated Paper, very similar in character to the one they had before them. Methods had been improved since then. He had had to read his Paper through from beginning to end, and by the time he had finished there were enough members left to propose and second the adjournment of the discussion, which took place at a later date. It was a great advantage for a Paper to be discussed on the same night as it was read.

Referring to the passage of the Act through Parliament in 1927, Sir Philip mentioned that he had moved no less than 99 amendments, of which a large number had been adopted and incorporated in the Act. He paid tribute to the assistance he had received from the Chairman of the Parliamentary Committee of The Institution, Mr. Gerald Eve, and the Secretary, Mr. Goddard.

He was very much interested in the attempt which Mr. Bull had made to help members in the matter of goodwill. He had not had time thoroughly to digest Mr. Bull's formula, but he thought it was likely to help members much more than the Parliamentary debates on the subject of goodwill, which those who had had the opportunity of reading them would realise were not very helpful. The lawyers at that time had found the question of goodwill, as Mr. Bull had indicated in his Paper, a very complete stumbling-block. Some definitions of goodwill were given, some of the old books were rooted out, and some of the definitions to be found in the old legal decisions one after another were placed before the Committee, and dismissed one after another as being inadequate and unintelligible. He thought Mr. Bull had very properly said in his summary that the effect upon the value of premises of a part of the goodwill was really what had to be discovered, and he was rather inclined to think that the formula with which he had endeavoured to interpret Clause 4, provision (a)—“the sum to be awarded as compensation for such goodwill shall not exceed such addition to the value of the holding at the termination of the tenancy as may be determined to be the direct result of the carrying on of the trade or business,”—contained the germ of what a surveyor had got to do if one of those cases was brought before him. He would say no more about it at that stage, because he had not had the opportunity of testing his formula by any case; and as everyone knew, the only way to test a principle was by applying it to some specific case and seeing how it worked out. He was sure, however, that Mr. Bull had been very helpful in putting that forward as a suggestion.

He thought there was at present no definite legal decision with regard to goodwill, although there had been decisions during the past year on many points, and he was not at all sure that the Courts would not leave it to the surveyors, and avoid any attempt to define goodwill in terms of legal phraseology.

With regard to the question of reversionary leases, Mr. Bull had said the Court, in the case he was citing, was not quite sure whether the provisions of the Act referred to a reversionary lease granted to some outsider, some third person, or to one granted to the existing tenant himself. Personally he did not think it mattered much which it was, but he could tell Mr. Bull what was the intention of the legislators who passed that section, because he himself had moved the amendment and drafted the clause. The case he had had in mind was where a third party who had bonâ fide become in receipt of a reversionary lease to take effect after one running at the time, in which case he thought it would be unfair to make the landlord, or the reversionary lessee, subject to the terms of the Act whether as to improvements or as to goodwill or as to the granting of a new lease. He personally did not think it mattered much whether one considered the question of a reversionary lease in terms of the existing tenant having a reversionary lease. Obviously he would not be able to take advantage of the Act when his first lease terminated, because he had got a second lease which ran on.

He now desired to say a word or two on what he took to be the principal point in the Paper, and that was what the author said as to the method of procedure in the county court. It seemed a serious state of affairs.

It meant that justice was not being dispensed evenly as between the suitors for justice, and there was no doubt that the Legislature had itself to blame for that. When the Bill was originally drafted by the Government, it contained a provision that all cases should be referred to a practical person; it might have been a surveyor or a solicitor, but in the majority of cases it would probably have gone to a surveyor. What subsequently happened is now a matter of history; the simple and inexpensive form of tribunal was done away with and the county court substituted. Had the tribunal originally proposed in the Bill been allowed to remain, many of the difficulties described by Mr. Bull would have been avoided.

However, the situation had to be faced, and it was not to be wondered at, in the circumstances, that some of the county court judges took different views as to what their jurisdiction was. What was clear was that a straightening-out of the situation was needed, so that the suitor, whether landlord or tenant, might know where he stood, and whether when he went into court he must go there fully supplied with counsel, solicitors, and as many surveyors as he liked, or whether he could rely on his case going through automatically to the single referee with the certainty of an inexpensive and early decision.

It was necessary to get out of that difficulty, and there was one way to get out of it. One could not, it was true, contract out of that Act; Section 9 prevented that, but there was a section which he had moved into the Bill—Section 21, Sub-section (8)—which provided that it might be agreed, either by a provision in the lease, or by an agreement in writing come to at any subsequent time, that all matters at issue under the Act should be referred to a single arbitrator under the Arbitration Act of 1899, and he thought his own firm told its clients that that was the best way out of the difficulty. However that might be, he was quite certain that the matter would have to be dealt with, and if Mr. Bull could help those in the House by giving them some account of the cases to which he had referred where judges had made conflicting statements as to their views of what their duties were, whether they ought to settle matters themselves, or at once refer them to an arbitrator, then it would be possible for some of them to consider the matter and see whether something could be done by the Legislature. But he was bound to say he had very little hope of that owing to the pressure on Parliamentary time.

He would strongly advise all tenants and landlords who wanted to keep themselves out of the uncertainty of the duplicated and expensive litigation on the questions of what their rights and liabilities were, to take refuge in the Act of 1899.

He had much pleasure in moving a hearty vote of thanks to the author for the industry, the clearness and the capacity which he had shown, and for the help he had given to members of The Institution in preparing his valuable Paper.

Mr. E. W. EASON (Fellow), who seconded the vote of thanks, said that there was no occasion on which he had risen to second a vote of thanks with greater pleasure than he did that evening, firstly, because it was a vote of thanks to Mr. Bull, who was the son of a very well-known member of the fraternity in the City; secondly, because of the ability which Mr. Bull had shown as one of the youngest who had read a Paper before The Institution; and thirdly, for the exhaustive and valuable Paper which he had presented.

He was not going to take up a lot of time with points on the Paper, mainly because he did not feel able to do it justice. He saw on the first page of the Paper the reference to what Sir Philip Pilditch had been speaking about—the uncertainties, and to some extent the chaos, of county court procedure; but that did not worry him at all, first because he had been reading The New Despotism, by Lord Hewart, and, secondly, because whatever was done in a court of law was open and reports of proceedings could be read and discussed. Should there be differences of opinion or of procedure, yet one did get from the Courts a decided and reasoned judgment. The number of Court cases referred to by Mr. Bull were available, although the Act had only been in force for about eighteen months. If, on the other hand, one turned to Departmental Orders which had been produced for the last ten years, as carried out by the Ministry of Health in connection with insanitary areas, it was found that surveyors, as representing the various owners, did not know one word more than they knew when they were first started. They had not the slightest idea what was governing those authorities, or what were the principles or what were the methods by which they arrived at their decisions. As the tribunal under the Act had been left as a court of law, although there might be difficulties at the commencement, publicity would eventually prove its salvation.

His experience was the same as Mr. Bull's as to the indifference of parties to the terms of the Act. As compared with the cases which had gone before the Court, he thought the result of the Act was that it led landlords and tenants to come to terms, and so far as that might have any effect it was, in his opinion, all to the good. He saw that when dealing with notices Mr. Bull became a lawyer; as he was not himself a lawyer he was unable to follow him; but he had produced a most valuable and useful schedule notices for surveyors in general to follow.

On the question of improvements, he always felt some little difficulty about the question of certificates. Apparently the owner was not asked to give a certificate that the improvement was an improvement, but he was asked to give a certificate at the end that the improvement had been carried out. If he neglected to do that, the tribunal gave the certificate. He would be interested to know Mr. Bull's opinion as to what was the effect of an owner giving a certificate, and whether in that case he to some extent bound himself and estopped himself from proving or alleging, at the end of the lease, that the improvement had not added anything to the letting value of the property.

With regard to goodwill, put shortly, Mr. Bull had pointed out what it was necessary that surveyors should grasp as far as possible, viz., that what they had to find out was not what the tenant was losing, but what the landlord was gaining. It did not necessarily follow that the two were the same. Surveyors must confine themselves to the gain to the landlord, and he supposed, therefore, that the method put forward by Mr. Bull for arriving at goodwill was probably one of the best methods which could be adopted for arriving at it. He still felt a little difficulty about it, however, because if one arrived at the utmost rental which any tenant other than the occupying tenant would give, the addition which the occupying tenant would give must remain, so far as he could see, a speculative figure. He had never been able to find—and he did not see that Mr. Bull's formulæ enabled one to arrive at it—what was the amount to be added which an occupying tenant would give as distinguished from one of the general public. In his old days, which were not scientific days, one used to be told that the occupying tenant would always give 10 per cent. more than anybody else; but one realised to-day that with the various forms of business, and the various methods of trading, any such rough-and-ready method as that was entirely out of the question. He would be very glad if Mr. Bull were able to give some suggestion as to a scientific method of really ascertaining what that addition should be. He could not see how it could be said that the occupying tenant would definitely give so much rent, and then that all the other members of the public would give only so much. He could understand it being said that the full rental value of the premises was so much; but then one had to arrive at what was the extra which the occupying tenant would give rather than be turned out.

On the alternative claim, Section 5, the doubtful point in the Act, he was very glad that there had been a decision in Murray's case. That seemed to him the only reasonable decision, and the only thing to be hoped was that, having got that decision, surveyors would proceed to act on it and agree with their adversaries rather than take it to another court to get it upset! He thought there was a great risk of getting that decision upset if it was taken to another court of law.

He desired to say one word on Part II. of the Act, Section 18, dealing with the measure of damages to the reversion in the case of dilapidations. Mr. Bull said on that point that "the law as it stood before the passing of the Act distinguished between damages for breach of a covenant to keep premises in repair and to yield up in repair. In the former case the measure of damages was the injury to the reversion; in the latter the cost of putting the premises into repair consistent with the covenant." He desired to suggest that that was rather a distinction without a difference, because he thought, speaking from memory, that even in the case of Ebbetts v. Conquest the damages were assessed as the cost of putting the premises into repair, the only difference being that there was a discount for present payment, seeing that the lease had something like $3\frac{1}{2}$ years to run. But he did think that to-day the effect of the section was to create three different measures of damage to the reversion. The one was the normal one, usually put into practice, viz., the cost of putting the premises into repair; the second one was that when the premises were going to be pulled down or otherwise altered, the effect of the decision in Joyner v. Weeks was altered, and the damages became nil, and the third case was the one in which there was something in between those two, as was specifically indicated in the next paragraph of the Paper where Mr. Bull said, for example, that in the case of repairs done within 15 months before the expiration of the term where the covenant demanded that they should be done during the last 12 months the damage to the reversion would be represented by something substantially less than the cost to do the work.

He was greatly interested to see and he agreed with Mr. Bull's conclusion, which was, he gathered, that where reasonable landlords and reasonable tenants existed the Act would not disturb them very much, and he was rather hoping (though perhaps it was rather an optimistic view) that within three or four years very little might be heard of the Act, because it would have caused landlords and tenants to put their heads together and come to reasonable terms with each other.

In conclusion he desired most cordially to second the vote of thanks to Mr. Bull for his extremely interesting Paper.

The CHAIRMAN announced that before he called on another speaker, Mr. Goddard would like to read a communication on another matter which he had received from the President, Mr. Bedells.

The SECRETARY then read the following note :—

“It has been pointed out to me by Mr. Weir Johnson, the hon. secretary of the Referees (Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927) Association, that the statement in my Presidential Address as to the constitution of the London panel of referees is inaccurate, as there is no separate London panel but a panel appointed for England and Wales as a whole consisting of 20 surveyors, 20 solicitors, and 17 barristers.

In the published list to which I referred certain names and addresses appeared under “London,” and I not unnaturally took them for a London panel.

But Mr. Wallis has pointed out that in the case of barristers, though their names are given in London, it does not limit their practice to the metropolis, and Mr. Johnson assures me the numbers of the panel as a whole are not limited by any particular districts.

To what extent in actual practice they will be so limited is a question which the future alone can determine; but as matters stand, it was not correct or quite fair to count and describe them as I did, and I am glad to avail myself of the opportunity of calling attention to Mr. Johnson’s correction so that no misconception may remain.

Mr. FRANK HUNT, C.V.O. (Member of Council), said he wished entirely to support the mover and seconder of the vote of thanks to Mr. Bull for a Paper which from beginning to end was good; and he thought nothing higher could be said of a Paper presented to The Institution than that.

He was not sure that he entirely agreed with Mr. Bull when he said that the passing of the Act had had no effect on values. It was probably early to form a definite opinion, but on first principles he must think that if one transferred some value from one interest to another, and gave facilities for a certain amount of litigation, it must have, again on general principles, some effect on value.

The second general point which Mr. Bull made was one based upon the experience of an Act of Northern Ireland, that in the course of a number of years there had only been 135 cases that had been litigated, and he held out a hope that the Act in England was likely to run quite smoothly. The cases he had quoted in the first part of his Paper seemed rather to belie that hope, and he thought it was a little optimistic to prophesy that the statute would work so smoothly as he suggested.

On the question of goodwill, as Mr. Bull had pointed out, there was no definition of it in the statute; nor, curiously enough, any judicial definition either. Even in the statute the word was used in a double sense. First of all, there was said to be the goodwill which was to be measured by the added value that the carrying on of a business in a property might confer on the property, which the landlord might secure from somebody else in the form of additional rent if the present occupier went out; but then again, having ascertained that, and found out what it represented to the freeholder, the lessee whose term had come to an end was to consider whether that compensation would compensate him for the loss of his goodwill if he shifted away; and so obviously the term "goodwill" was used for two entirely different things. He thought there was no doubt at all that the second figure must always be higher than the first; and therefore the tenant, who was entitled to claim a new lease when he was satisfied that the compensation for goodwill as first defined was less than the loss he would sustain if he moved away by the loss of his goodwill, was entitled to ask for a new lease without considering figures at all, and could quite obviously start off by saying "The compensation I get for goodwill as provided for in the statute is bound to be so much less than the loss I sustain that I ought to have a new lease." There were no directions in the statute as to how the second item was to be ascertained at all. That was to be determined by a tribunal, but what was the right basis nobody knew, and there apparently had been very few cases reported as to how it had been interpreted. The only case he could find where figures were quoted was in a case at Nottingham, where the Lord Mayor of Nottingham for the year ending 9th November last was head of a large motor garage in Trent Street. His lease had come to an end,—the lease of a part of the property. He applied, at any rate, for compensation or for a new lease. The curious thing on figures was this, that the county court judge apparently held that the added value by reason of his occupying there was about £20 a year. The landlord had sworn that he proposed very soon to erect a brewhouse on the site, and because of that the firm could not have a new lease; and the court held that if the landlord did not, within twelve months after the firm gave up possession, erect that new brewhouse, then the firm was entitled to £500 compensation. With all the materials at one's disposal, he wondered how any of those figures ever came into existence. On the other hand, there was an admitted case where a profit of about £264 a year was made, where the rent was of the order of £400 a year, the extra rent due to the business was only a few pounds, but the value of the goodwill to the tenant was £1,500; and then in the end he got nothing.

Mr. BULL asked where that case had occurred.

Mr. HUNT said he believed it was a case at Bournemouth. He was wondering how anyone was going to settle the new rent. He agreed that the statute was a little bit definite when it said that the new rent to be settled by the tribunal should be such a rent as the tribunal might determine to be the rent which a willing lessee, other than the tenant, would agree to give, but irrespective of any goodwill which might have become attached to the premises.

Did not that really bring one back to the very point with which the particular Act was intended to deal? He gathered that the intention of Parliament was to meet a set of circumstances such as the following: There always had been a certain number of wicked landlords who, when a successful trader's term was coming to an end, tried hard to pinch him for something more than the value of the property, and to secure in the form of rent what, in fact, was part of the profits of his business apart from rent. It would have been quite simple to have said that no landlord, on discussing with a sitting tenant a renewal of his tenancy, should be entitled to recover any rent beyond that which the premises if vacant and to let at the time of the new arrangement would command if let to some person other than the sitting tenant. Put that way, one would not have got into the difficult regions of goodwill, a term whereof nobody knew the meaning, and it would have been quite simple to leave that to a tribunal to determine. He was told that that was one of the ways in which the problem was, at one time, attempted to be solved. He was not at all sure that, again, the legal luminaries of both Houses had thought it was possibly too simple; but he believed there had been three Cabinet Committees sitting on it, and in the end the complicated arrangement which had been embodied in the Act under discussion was the result.

Mr. A. J. BRICKWELL, C.B.E. (Member of Council), said at that late hour he could neither do justice nor adequately express his gratitude to Mr. Bull for his admirable Paper.

He was one of those who did not hold the view taken by Mr. Bull about the county courts being so difficult. Everyone knew that in county courts in this country every judge was a law unto himself; but he had always found that that could be overcome by a judicious inquiry of the clerk of the court as to what was going to happen.

As regards the tables, he had marked them "excellent," and he thought The Institution was truly indebted to Mr. Bull for setting them out in the concise way he had. He expected to see the tables pinned up in a good many surveyors' offices.

He could not agree with Mr. Bull about the question of competition. He thought that if he studied the Act very carefully, the tenant would never be entitled to claim for absence of competition where it was not brought about by some act of the landlord. When it came to how much the multiplier should be for goodwill, he was surprised to hear the way in which everybody had skated over the subject. He had quite expected to see the room filled with hornets. He would respectfully disagree with Mr. Bull that ten years' purchase of the amount of the added value of the rent consequent upon that will-o'-the-wisp, "goodwill," was too much, for he had always been bought up to think that something between two and three years' purchase was the most anyone got under compulsory acquisition for the whole of his trade interest even if he was disturbed in his freehold.

With regard to the question of whether a tenant might have a new lease or compensation, however unfair it might be, he held the view that the tenant had to back either one horse or the other, and if he failed in his first claim he could not take up No. 2, although, according to Mr. Bull, it was open to anyone to claim compensation after his tenancy had finished, and therefore, if he happened to fail in his new lease claim, which he had to make before his term had expired, he might start another action and claim compensation. On that he would like to hear Mr. Bull's views.

As regards the shops in first-class positions, he did not believe that the question of goodwill arose. He thought the best rent that could be obtained from those positions would wipe away in most cases any question of what a tenant interested in a particular class of business would pay.

He was afraid Mr. Bull had become a little ingenious in trying to lead them on as to how the tenant might be defeated in a claim for damages in premises nearing the end of their useful life at the termination of a tenancy, and he was afraid he had very little sympathy with the view.

As regards the statutory tenant, there Mr. Bull raised an argument which very few surveyors, he imagined, had considered, and he was bound to say that he thought Mr. Bull had made a point on which surveyors would have to think very hard. Of course a statutory tenant could give notice, whereas a landlord could not, and he supposed that, so long as the landlord could not give the notice, he was unlikely to have any claim made against him under the Act, and the tenant was unlikely, while the Rent Restriction Act continued, to give notice.

He had had the pleasure of hearing the other night Mr. Edgson's Paper at the Auctioneers' Institute, and he had certainly expressed a view which the speaker had not appreciated, viz., where a lease stipulated that a tenant could not sub-let provided the words "without licence" were not inserted. Mr. Edgson held a view which he thought was right, and that there was no right to sub-let, whether under the Act or otherwise, in that circumstance. It would be as well to bear that in mind in arranging any future leases of that class of property where it was undesirable that it should pass from the hands of the tenant to whom it was left.

He had been told that under Clause 19, which immediately followed, a prohibition against the alteration of the premises was ultra vires, and contrary to the general law. He would very much esteem Mr. Bull's opinion on that. He was rather inclined to think that while one could contract against sub-letting, one could not contract against alteration of the premises.

Mr. Bull had skated over Part III. of the Act, and Sir Philip Pilditch had told the meeting how the disaster had come about. He regarded Part III. as nothing less than a disaster to the profession. He would sum it up by saying that under the Agricultural Holdings Act there was no one in that room, however eminent he might be in his profession, who would presume, unless he had had practice as an agricultural valuer, to settle the differences between two farmers as to a tenant-right valuation, and he submitted that it was presumption on the part of the legal profession to settle the ordinary merits of a dispute as to what rent a tenant should pay in the future. It could not be altered at once, but he thought it would be in the interests of the members of The Institution to work with one will to see that they were put in a position on the same lines as used in the Agricultural Holdings Act, in which no suggestion had ever been made, to his knowledge, that a lawyer should settle the differences as to what a tenant should receive for his interest in a farm, ingoing or outgoing valuation.

He desired in conclusion, to express his deep sense of gratitude to Mr. Bull for his most exhaustive Paper.

Mr. MONTAGU EVANS (Fellow) associated himself with what other speakers had said with regard to Mr. Bull's Paper. He had been a little astonished, on reading the Paper, at Mr. Bull's courage in tackling the subject in its legal aspect, having regard to the fact that he was a surveyor; but the very fact that he had tackled it in that way made his Paper so very valuable to the members of The Institution, because many of them could learn a lot from his Paper with regard to procedure in county courts, and so on.

Mr. Bull had referred to Section 3, Sub-section (4), and Section 9, and evidently thought that they conflicted with one another. He ventured to suggest that they did not because Section 9 was what he would term the "dominant" section," especially having regard to the marginal note on it. The marginal note, it would be remembered, referred to restriction in contracting out of the Act. Section 3, Sub-section (4), in effect said that a tenant shall be defended if he breaks a covenant not to alter the premises. That, he thought, was the effect of that sub-section; whereas Section 9 said distinctly that he should not contract out of the Act. He hoped he had made the difference clear as it appeared to him, because, if he was right, Section 9 restricted all tenancies since the Act, or rather, to be correct, since March, 1928; but in spite of that, the position would still be this, that if a man were to alter his premises by an improvement he would infringe his covenant not to alter the premises, and therefore Section 3, Sub-section (4), got over that difficulty.

He wished to say a word about statutory tenants. It had always seemed to him that a statutory tenant did come within the Landlord and Tenant Act, because the definition of "tenant" in the Act referred to a tenant by operation of law, and it seemed to him that a tenant under the Rent Act was tenant by operation of law. Mr. Bull had said that even if he did come within the Act he was rather unlucky, because he could not make a claim; but he personally was not quite so sure of that. He would like Mr. Bull to consider the point, because he might find something which would scotch it altogether; but it seemed to him that a statutory tenant could make a claim under the Act at any time before 25th December in any year, because the Rent Act was continued under the Expiring Laws (Continuance) Act each year, and for all practical purposes that really turned a statutory tenant into a yearly tenant, and if he made his claim just before the Expiring Laws (Continuance) Bill became an Act his claim was registered. It was true that, in course of time, that claim might become ultra vires, but then, he did not see any objection to making another claim at a later date, and so keeping his claim alive. If the Act was suddenly repealed, of course it would be different, but in that event the Legislature would no doubt provide for the contingency.

He had only one final word, on the question of goodwill. Goodwill, it seemed to him, was divided up mainly into two portions—goodwill which attached to premises, and goodwill of the tenant's personality, if he might put it in that way. He thought that what Mr. Hunt had said was perfectly true, that a tenant would nearly always find that his claim for compensation for goodwill would not compensate him for removal, because the goodwill attached to the premises as a whole must be greater than the goodwill of a part which was the tenant's personality goodwill. Therefore he thought it would be found that the tenant would nearly always claim a new lease in lieu of compensation for goodwill.

In conclusion he desired to say that he would take a further opportunity of very carefully studying the Paper, and he thought all members should keep it handy for reference. The tables, in particular, would be found to be of the greatest service.

The vote of thanks was put by the CHAIRMAN and carried by acclamation.

Mr. BULL, in reply, said the members had been extremely kind in their reception of his Paper. He felt that such trouble as he had taken had been most amply repaid by the interest shown in it and by the discussion which had resulted.

The following written reply has been received from the author:—

Sir Philip Pilditch, referring to my remarks upon the lack of uniformity in county court procedure, took a more serious view of the situation than I intended to convey. Personally I am of opinion that in cases under Sections 4 or 5 a county court judge is the best tribunal, and I venture to think that few arbitrators would be able to assimilate the often indigestible mixtures of law and fact presented by cases thereunder. I agree entirely with Mr. Eason when he says that the publicity afforded to disputes by the method of settlement adopted is most valuable, and will ultimately result in the existing anomalies being removed.

I was very glad to hear Sir Philip Pilditch say that Section 15, Sub-section (3), was intended to apply to reversionary leases to third parties only. The interpretation put upon that section in Perkins v. Bournemouth Development Company will, as I pointed out, in certain cases deprive a tenant of compensation to which he would otherwise have been entitled.

Mr. Eason asked whether I could suggest any scientific basis for arriving at the increased rental value which an occupying tenant would give.

With deference to Mr. Eason's great experience I do not myself consider that this increase is necessarily the same as the increased rental value in the open market due to the tenant's goodwill, and the latter is, I think, what we should endeavour to estimate. I do not believe it is possible to evolve any scientific basis of valuation comparable, for instance, with a rental valuation at so much per square foot, but I do feel that if the matter is approached in some such way as I have suggested in my Paper, our experience as valuers will enable us to arrive at the desired result.

As to certificates under Section 3, Sub-section (6), I do not think that a landlord giving one is thereby estopped from denying at the end of the tenancy that the improvement increases the rental value. The certificate is merely evidence that the improvement is a proper improvement.

That implies, of course, that it is calculated to increase the rental value, but whether it does, in fact, do so is a matter to be decided at the end of the tenancy in the circumstances then existing.

I should like to draw attention to the case of Taylor v. Klar, reported in the Estates Gazette on 14th December last. His Honour Judge Turner, in addition to making some pertinent remarks as to the circumstances in which a claim under Section 4 may be successful, decided, contrary to the decision in Murray's Pharmacies v. Briggs, that alternative claims under Section 5 are not admissible. Doubt on the point is thus intensified, and it is to be hoped that an authoritative ruling will soon be given.

I agree with Mr. Brickwell that some such figure of years' purchase as 2 or 3 is commonly used to value the whole of a tenant's goodwill, but I still most emphatically do not think that these multipliers can be applied to increased rental value due to goodwill for the reasons I have set out in the Paper.

Mr. Brickwell misunderstood my suggestion as to the steps to be taken by a mesne landlord of old premises who, himself leaving only a short tenancy, receives from his tenant a claim for compensation for an improvement. It is not unlikely that if the mesne landlord pays compensation and then, at the end of his own tenancy, say in 7 years' time, in his turn claims from the superior landlord, he will be met with the defence that the premises are to be rebuilt, and he will thus be unable, possibly, to recover any part of the sum paid to the tenant. I suggested that in order to protect himself he should adopt the perfectly justifiable course of serving a counter-notice under Section 2, Sub-section (1) (d), offering a renewal of the tenancy.

Mr. Montagu Evans pointed out a most ingenious method whereby a statutory tenant could make a claim under Sections 4 or 5 within the time limits laid down if the tenancy comes to an end owing to the protection of the Rent Restriction Acts being withdrawn. Should the Act apply at all to such tenants, then I agree with him the method would be effective.

Several speakers referred to the table of notices in the Paper, and I should like to acknowledge my indebtedness to my friend Mr. C. C. Moore, who suggested that such a table would be useful.

The following communication has been received from Mr. ARTHUR H. DAVIS (Fellow):—

I propose to limit my remarks on Mr. Bull's very able Paper to Section 18, Part II., of the Act.

If the Act as a whole can be said to have somewhat revolutionised the relationship between landlord and tenant, then Section 18 does so, as regards dilapidations, to a very marked degree, and a number of well-known legal decisions will now cease to be effective.

To begin with, the earliest case of importance is perhaps that of Payne v. Haine (1847), in which the age, class, locality and general condition of a property have to be taken into consideration when assessing damages for dilapidations. It is exactly eighty years from that decision to the passing of the 1927 Act, so that it will be seen that the evolution of justice for the tenant with regard to dilapidation matters has been a somewhat slow process. Evolution must, however, necessarily be slow.

The first decision to be effected by the Act is Morgan v. Hardy (1886), which was the deciding factor in the Court of Appeal case of Calthorpe v. McOscar (1926), where it was held that deterioration of the neighbourhood since the granting of the lease many years before did not lower the standard of dilapidations which a lessor could require at the end of the lease. This decision, in view of Section 18, Sub-section (2), is now of no value, and if a property has depreciated, the amount of damages will also depreciate therewith. This also raises the point of appreciation of the value of the property, and as a corollary to the former this also must, in my view, be taken into consideration when assessing damages.

Inderwick v. Leach (1884), in which the lessor was awarded damages even though the property was to be demolished at the end of the lease, ceases to have effect, and so also in my view will Joyner v. Weeks (1891). Here the lessor was awarded damages against the lessee although he relet the premises in their unrepaired state to another lessee who was willing to repair them at his own expense.

In Myers v. Hollington (1925), though the local authority had acquired the property as one being insanitary and in an insanitary area, the unfortunate lessee had to pay the estimated cost of putting this property into repair, although, even had he been able so to do he would not have prevented it from being classified as insanitary. This case also will be a dead letter under the new Act.

Mr. Bull's reference on page 63 of the Transactions to Section 146 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, reminds me of the case of the Cannon Brewery, Limited, v. Signal Press Limited (1928), reported in The Institution's Journal, June, 1928, where, under Section 196 (3) of the 1925 Act, notice of breach of covenant was held to be properly served on a tenant if it be left with some person on the premises, if there are reasonable grounds for supposing that that person will, if possible, pass it on to the tenant. I do not think that this will now hold good, as all notices to the various parties interested should be in writing under Section 18 of the 1927 Act.

Some reference should be made to interim schedules. He will be a bold man who attempts to thrust upon his lessee during the period of his lease a schedule demanding complete decorative and structural repair of the premises. In this respect, at any rate, this Section 18 jointly with 146 of the Law and Property Act, 1925, has been of enormous benefit to lessees in general, as it protects them from unfair and improper demands by their lessors.

As regards damage to the reversion, speaking generally I think it will be acceded that the measure here will normally be the cost of putting the property into good structural and decorative repair in accordance with the terms of the lease, as obviously otherwise the price realised on a sale or the rent on reletting might be seriously affected.

PAPER 524.

TOWN PLANNING OF BUILT-UP AREAS.By W. Townend (Fellow).

To be read at the Ordinary General Meeting of The Surveyors' Institution on Monday, 6th January, 1930.

The subject of Town Planning is one which has engaged the attention of The Institution on a number of occasions since the Housing and Town Planning Act of 1909 first became law, and in the intervening years large areas of suburban land have been the subject of schemes.

An extract from the Annual Report of the Ministry of Health showing the town planning schemes proposed or in operation at the 31st March, 1929, and the area included in the schemes will be found as an Appendix on page 112.

Legislation relating to town planning was consolidated by the Town Planning Act of 1925, and for convenience I give Section 1 of that Act:—

“1.—(1) A town planning scheme may be made in accordance with the provisions of this Act as respects any land which is in course of development or appears likely to be used for building purposes, with the general object of securing proper sanitary conditions, amenity, and convenience in connection with the laying out and use of the land, and of any neighbouring lands:

Provided that, where a piece of land already built upon or a piece of land not likely to be used for building purposes is so situate with respect to any land likely to be used for building purposes that the general object of the scheme would be better secured by its inclusion in any town planning scheme made with respect to the last-mentioned land, the scheme may include such piece of land as aforesaid, and may provide for the demolition or alteration of any buildings thereon so far as may be necessary for carrying the scheme into effect.

(2) Where it appears to the Minister of Health

(hereinafter referred to as 'the Minister') that on account of the special architectural, historic or artistic interest attaching to a locality it is expedient that with a view to preserving the existing character and to protecting the existing features of the locality, a town planning scheme should be made with respect to any area comprising that locality, the Minister may, notwithstanding that the land or any part thereof is already developed, authorise a town planning scheme to be made with respect to that area prescribing the space about buildings, or limiting the number of buildings to be erected, or prescribing the height or character of buildings, and, subject as aforesaid, the provisions of this Act shall apply accordingly.

(3) The expression 'land likely to be used for building purposes' shall include any land likely to be used as, or for the purpose of providing, open spaces, roads, streets, parks, pleasure or recreation grounds, or for the purpose of executing any work upon or under the land incidental to a town planning scheme, whether in the nature of a building work or not, and the decision of the Minister, whether land is likely to be used for building purposes or not shall be final and conclusive."

From the above section it will be seen that the Town Planning Act at present authorises the preparation of town planning schemes only for land in course of development or likely to be developed for building purposes except that (a) buildings which are essentially part of an otherwise undeveloped area may be included in schemes for those areas, and (b) special schemes may be prepared (as in the case of Oxford) with a view to preserving the existing character and features of localities of special architectural, historic or artistic interest.

That, very shortly, sets out the position as regards town planning (except for the alteration in the statistics relating to schemes) which existed in 1926 when the Newcastle Corporation went to Parliament with the Newcastle Corporation Bill of that year, and as what happened in connection with Newcastle is probably the reason why the Council has asked me to read this Paper to you, I set out Part II. of the Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation Act, 1926, in order that you may follow, without any difficulty, references which I shall make to that Act in the course of the Paper :—

“ PART II.

Town Planning.

4. The Corporation may at any time and from time to time make a town planning scheme or town planning schemes with respect to any area in the city notwithstanding that the land in that area or any part thereof is developed at the time of the making of such scheme and the provisions of the Town Planning Act 1925 (in this Part of this Act referred to as ‘ the Act of 1925 ’) shall subject to the provisions of this Part of this Act apply to the making of any such scheme and to any such scheme when made.

5. The purposes for which land may be purchased under a town planning scheme made pursuant to this Part of this Act shall include—

- (a) the purpose of improving and developing frontages to and developing lands abutting on or adjacent to any new street or any widening of an existing street; and
- (b) the purpose of securing the development or redevelopment of land in accordance with any provisions of the scheme where it appears to the Corporation that there would be difficulty in securing such development or redevelopment in the manner provided by those provisions by reason of the land concerned being held in parcels or plots of inconvenient size or shape.

6.—(1) Section 92 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845 shall not be incorporated in any Order made under Section 8 of the Act of 1925 authorising the Corporation to purchase lands compulsorily for the purposes of any town planning scheme made pursuant to this Part of this Act but if the owner of or any person interested in any house or other building or manufactory of which the Corporation have served upon him notice to treat in respect of a specified portion only shall within twenty-one days after the service of such notice by notice in writing to the Corporation allege that such specified portion cannot be severed from the remainder of the property without material detriment thereto the arbitrator to whom any question of disputed compensation is referred under any such Order (in this section referred to as 'the arbitrator') shall in addition to the other questions required to be determined by him determine whether the said specified portion of the property can be severed from the remainder without material detriment thereto and if not whether any and what other portion less than the whole (but not exceeding the portion for which the Corporation have compulsory powers of purchase) can be so severed.

(2) If the arbitrator determines that the portion of the property specified in the notice to treat or any such other portion as aforesaid can be severed from the remainder without material detriment thereto such owner or other person as aforesaid may be required to sell and convey to the Corporation the portion so determined to be severable without the Corporation being obliged or compellable to purchase the whole the Corporation paying such sum for the portion taken by them including compensation for any damage sustained by the owner or other person by severance or otherwise as shall be awarded by the arbitrator.

(3) If the arbitrator determines that the portion of the property specified in the notice to treat can notwithstanding the allegation of such owner or other person as aforesaid be severed from the remainder without material detriment thereto the arbitrator may in his absolute discretion determine and order that the costs charges and expenses incurred by such owner or other person incident to the determination of any matters under this sub-section shall be borne and paid by such owner or other person.

(4) If the arbitrator determines that the portion of the property specified in the notice to treat cannot be severed from the remainder without material detriment thereto (and whether or not he shall determine that any other portion can be so severed) the Corporation may withdraw their notice to treat and thereupon they shall pay to such owner or other person as aforesaid all costs charges and expenses reasonably and properly incurred by him in consequence of such notice.

(5) If the arbitrator determines that the portion of the property specified in the notice to treat cannot be severed from the remainder without material detriment thereto but that any such other portion as aforesaid can be so severed the Corporation in case they shall not withdraw the notice to treat shall pay to such owner or other person as aforesaid all costs charges and expenses reasonably and properly incurred by him in consequence of such notice or such portion thereof as the arbitrator shall having regard to the circumstances of the case and his final determination think fit.

(6) The provisions of this section shall be stated in every notice given under any such order as aforesaid to sell and convey any premises.

7. The provisions of paragraph (2) of Part II.* of the Third Schedule to the Act of 1925 shall not apply in relation to any scheme made under this Part of this Act but the Corporation shall not be entitled to purchase compulsorily any land which is the property of any local authority or has been acquired by any company body or person for the purposes of a railway dock canal water or other public undertaking without the consent of such local authority company body or person but such consent shall not be unreasonably withheld and any question whether or not such consent has been unreasonably withheld shall be determined by the Minister of Health.

8.—(1) No provisions in any such town planning scheme as aforesaid prescribing the space about buildings or limiting the number of buildings to be erected or prescribing the height or character of buildings within the meaning of Sub-section (2) of Section 11 of the Act of 1925 shall operate so as—

- (a) to require the demolition removal or alteration of any building existing at the date of the passing of the resolution of the Council to prepare or adopt the scheme or of which the erection was commenced before that date; or
- (b) to affect the user of any building for any purpose for which the same was used at the said date unless the person entitled to the

* Paragraph (2) of Part II. is as follows :—

“Nothing in this Act shall authorise the compulsory acquisition of any land which is the property of any local authority or has been acquired by any corporation or company for the purposes of a railway, dock, canal, water or other public undertaking, or which, at the date of the order authorising the compulsory acquisition of the land, forms part of any park, garden, or pleasure ground, or is otherwise required for the amenity or convenience of any house.”

user of the building shall after that date (i.) commence to use such building for any purpose other than that purpose or (ii.) voluntarily cease for a continuous period of six months or upwards to use such building for any purpose;

unless and until the scheme is brought into operation for that purpose by an order of the Corporation approved by the Minister of Health and where an order is so made the provisions of Sub-section (2) of Section 11* of the Act of 1925 shall not operate so as to preclude a claim for compensation under that Act on account of the demolition removal or alteration of the building or the affecting of the purposes for which the building may be used.

(2) An order under this section shall specify the period within which any building to which the same relates is to be demolished removed or altered or any purpose for which any such building is used is to be discontinued or changed.

(3) Before applying to the Minister of Health for approval of an order under this section the Corporation shall serve a copy thereof on the owner or owners of all land or buildings to which the order relates and shall consider any representations which such owner or owners may make to them within such period (not being less than one month) as may be specified for that purpose in the order and may make such modifications in the order as they think necessary in consequence of any such representations.

(4) Upon the submission of the order (with or without modification) to the Minister of Health the Corporation shall serve on the owner a copy of the order as so submitted together with a notice that objections may be made to the said Minister within a period of one month from the date of service of the copy of the order and notice.

* Sub-section (2) of Section 11 of the Act of 1925 is as follows :—

“ Property shall not be deemed to be injuriously affected by reason of the making of any provisions inserted in a town planning scheme, which prescribe the space about buildings or limit the number of buildings to be erected, or prescribe the height or character of buildings and which the Minister, having regard to the nature and situation of the land affected by the provisions considers reasonable for the purpose.”

9. Any person being or claiming to be an owner of land within any area to which a scheme proposed to be made under this Part of this Act relates may register his name and address with the Corporation and any person who has so registered his name and address in relation to any land within any such area shall be entitled to be served at his last registered address with a copy of any notices required by any regulations made by the Minister of Health under the Act of 1925 or any Act repealed thereby to be given by the Corporation in connection with the preparation of the said scheme and notwithstanding anything in the said regulations it shall not be incumbent on the Corporation to serve a copy of any such notices on any person who has not so registered his name and address except that in the case of a railway company a copy of such notices shall be sent to the secretary at the principal office of such company :

Provided that in any notice advertised by the Corporation pursuant to any such Act or regulations as aforesaid of their intention to prepare or adopt any such scheme as aforesaid they shall give notice of the effect of the provisions of this section.

10. For the purposes of the sections of this Act of which the marginal notes are respectively 'Limitation on requirements under scheme' and 'Registration of ownership of land and service of notices' the word 'owner' has the same meaning as in the Lands Clauses Acts."

After Newcastle had obtained these powers similar powers were obtained by Blackpool and Eastbourne, and in the last Session of Parliament Bills were presented by the City of Birmingham, and by Derby. In my opinion, therefore, the time has now arrived when careful consideration should be given to the question as to whether a new general Act of Parliament is necessary instead of a succession of applications to Parliament for permission to use, for the replanning of developed areas, the machinery of the Town Planning Act, 1925, which was designed for the town planning of undeveloped land in order that the evils which have arisen in the past owing to individual or unconsidered planning may not be perpetuated in the future, when new roads are made or new buildings erected.

I hope I may speak for the majority of the members of The Surveyors' Institution when I say that we are in favour of town planning, though some of us, I admit, do at times express ourselves strongly on the delays which take place owing to the somewhat leisurely procedure by which schemes pass through their various stages and ultimately become operative. I hope that I may also represent the opinion of our members when I say that I think we should welcome any well-considered and framed Act of Parliament which would enable municipal authorities to correct on built-up areas the errors of those who have laid out estates in the past; and that if a code of laws could be framed which would enable municipal authorities to replan their areas to the advantage of the communities living therein without inflicting undue hardship on individual owners, we should, as an Institution, do all in our power to help forward work which must be to the advantage of the country as a whole.

My experience, however, in Newcastle has caused me to have grave doubts as to the possibility of adapting a code of legislation, which was specifically designed to deal with the problems arising out of the development of open land on the fringe of built-up areas, to what is really not town planning but the replanning of the towns of this country.

In this connection the following observations of the Ministry of Health on the Newcastle Bill when it was first presented in Parliament (at which time Part II. was Part VII.) are interesting:—

“On the proposals of Part VII. of the Bill generally, it appears to the Ministry that to provide for necessary improvements in the developed parts of towns on the lines proposed by the Corporation promises many advantages. The usual practice at present is to submit proposals for individual improvements. The essence of town planning is to consider the problem as a whole, and, after consulting all interests, to submit a concerted plan, to be carried out as means and opportunity allow.

Such a course should promote economy and efficiency, and, therefore, the Ministry would like to see the proposal tried.

As regards private interests, the Town Planning Acts contain provisions for compensation when an owner is injuriously affected. Furthermore, the Ministry emphasise the importance of fully consulting private interests in preparing a scheme. Ample opportunities are given to interested persons to put forward their views, including public inquiries in the locality."

You will observe, therefore, that the Ministry stated that they would like to see a proposal tried.

The next stage of Newcastle was that in October, 1927, the City Council approved a report of the Town Improvement Committee as to the preparation of a town planning scheme for the central part of the city, and a resolution to that effect was thereupon passed by the Council.

In December the Council confirmed a report of the same Committee recommending them to approve the line of a proposed new street which was intended to be a new arterial road running through that part of the city which it was intended to replan.

A reference to the plan of the scheme* which was prepared and part of which has now been abandoned will indicate that the proposals of the Corporation were such as might have been welcomed by owners of unbuilt-upon land, but when applied to a built-up area in the centre of a large city were bound to cause considerable apprehension in the minds of owners whose properties were included within the lines of streets on the town planning map, and which, therefore, could not be built upon or altered except with the consent of the City Council, unless the owner was prepared to run the risk of carrying out building operations for which, in the event of the Corporation deciding to acquire his property, he would be unable to recover compensation.

During 1928 a number of owners on the line of this new street, which had been approved by the City Council, wished either to rebuild or develop their properties, and the Corporation, in view of their avowed intention to proceed under town planning powers, refused to sanction the erection of new buildings on the line of the street.

Four owners appealed to the Ministry of Health against decisions of the Corporation, and in October an enquiry was held by one of the Inspectors appointed by the Ministry.

* By the courtesy of Mr. W. J. Steele, M.INST.C.E., the City Engineer of Newcastle-upon Tyne, I am able to reproduce a copy of the plan.

The parties were represented by counsel, and the Inspector suggested that it would be prudent to adjourn the enquiry to enable the Corporation to purchase the properties which their owners wished to develop. When, however, the adjourned enquiry was heard in November, it was found that in one case only had the Corporation come to terms with the owner, so that the Minister was obliged to decide the appeals.

On the 11th December, 1928, the Minister of Health communicated his decision to the Town Clerk, stating that he did not consider that he could properly acquiesce in unduly postponing consent to building development in pursuance of the powers of the City Council under their Town Planning Act, and he gave the Corporation a month in which to decide to purchase by arbitration in the event of their being unable to buy by agreement; should they fail to do this, he would be constrained to grant the request of the petitioners and allow them to proceed with their building schemes.

At the end of the month the City Council, realising that these four cases were only the forerunners of numerous others which would occur in the future, decided to abandon the line of the proposed street, and the owners were left in the unfortunate position of having had their development hung up, and having incurred heavy expenses in the form of the fees of counsel, solicitors, and surveyors, which they have been unable to recover from the Corporation.

The following extract from the Town Planning Report of the Ministry of Health for 1928-29 evidently refers to Newcastle-upon-Tyne :—

“ The appeals included some relating to the proposed reconstruction or improvement of buildings (involving heavy expenditure) on the line of a projected new road in an already developed area for which a scheme is being prepared under powers given by Local Act. The Local Authority sought to prevent the reconstruction or improvement of the buildings pending the construction of a new street proposed to be included in the plan, though the Local Authority had not come to any final and definite decision as to the actual construction of the street and the acquisition of the land for the purpose, and were in fact considering the possibility of less expensive, if not equally satisfactory, alternatives. The question of proceeding with the proposals for reconstruction and improvement, which were not disputed to be genuinely intended, had been pending for a long time, and the Minister felt that the appellants could not fairly be precluded from proceeding with their development any longer, unless an equitable settlement was made with them by purchase or otherwise, or be expected to await the completion of the scheme, of which there was no reasonably early prospect. The Local Authority, after a further review of the situation, decided not to proceed with any proposal for immediate acquisition or other form of equitable settlement, and permission was accordingly granted for the development to proceed, with the title to compensation which permission involves if the development should be interfered with under any proposal included in the scheme as finally approved.

The Minister's view of the case was in accordance with his general policy, which has been to urge Local Authorities to make equitable settlements with owners, so far as reasonably practicable, as an alternative to allowing development to proceed, where the proposed reservation of an owner's land for an open space or similar purpose involves material loss to the owner through his inability to realise the value of land which is shown to be ripe for immediate building development, and the completion of the scheme, under which a claim for compensation could be made in respect of the reservation, is likely to be long delayed. The preparation of schemes is unavoidably taking much longer than was originally contemplated, and the Minister does not consider that it would be fair that owners should suffer serious loss on that account. The Local Authority and the Minister are entitled to be fully satisfied, however, that the land concerned is really ripe for development, that the proposed development is genuinely intended, and that the development could not reasonably be postponed in favour of the development of other land in the owner's possession also available for building purposes. Local Authorities must also be allowed a reasonable time for shaping their proposals before they can fairly be called upon to meet situations of this kind."

I have considered it necessary to give you this summary of what occurred when the procedure of the Town Planning Act was put into operation in a built-up area in order that you may be able to consider the problem in the light of actual experience.

It has, of course, often been alleged that the old-fashioned method of proceeding by Private Bill, when all the interests affected may expect to know their fate within probably three or four years, is an expensive one for municipal authorities. On the other hand it would appear that the method of purchasing piecemeal over long intervals under a town planning scheme may be equally costly and probably more serious from the point of view of owners generally, in view of the fact that, once a scheme has begun to pass through its various stages, the "dead hand" is laid upon the properties which are likely to be affected by the making of the scheme. Further than this, while I believe there is not complete unanimity of opinion on the point, the general view appears to be that until a scheme has become operative and has been sanctioned by the Minister of Health, no owner can recover compensation in respect of injury sustained through the making of the scheme.

I will now proceed to deal with the effect of the application of the Newcastle Act, which has been used as a model by other authorities, to built-up areas.

You will notice that Section 6 modifies the restrictions contained in Section 92 of the Lands Clauses (Consolidation) Act, 1845, and paragraph 2 of Part II. of the Third Schedule to the Town Planning Act of 1925, as applied by Section 8 of the latter Act on the compulsory acquisition of curtilages of houses or parts of property, or of land belonging to a local authority or statutory company.

Acquisition of property of the kind mentioned may obviously be desirable in connection with street or other improvements for which provision is made in schemes. The provision enabling parts of property to be taken is modelled on similar provisions in many local Acts relating to street improvements, and the provision relating to the compulsory acquisition of land belonging to a local authority or statutory company is similar in effect to Section 33 (13) of the Public Health Act, 1925.

It will also be noticed that the arbitrator's discretion is apparently fettered by this section (Section 6) as he has to determine, in addition to the other questions required to be determined by him, whether the said specific portion of the property can be severed from the remainder without material detriment thereto, and whether any and what other portion less than the whole but not exceeding the portion for which the Corporation have compulsory powers of purchase can be so severed.

I may be wrong in my interpretation, but from a perusal of the section it would seem that a corporation may first get an order under the Town Planning Act, the plan attached to the order would delineate a certain piece of property, the notice to treat plan adopts that same piece, the owner thinks the corporation should take more of his land, and so, perhaps, does the arbitrator, but the arbitrator is tied because the plan attached to the order is the limit of the corporation's power to purchase.

The powers of compulsory purchase would, I assume, apply only to improvements authorised in a scheme approved by the Ministry after compliance with the prescribed procedure under the Town Planning Act, which makes provision for public inquiry and repeated consideration of objection and representations, both by the local authority in preparing schemes and the Minister in considering them.

Confirmation by the Ministry of any proposed order for compulsory purchase would continue to be required.

I give a further extract from the Report of the Ministry of Health on the Newcastle Bill:—

“Section VIII.—Modification of the application of the provisions of Section 11 of the Town Planning Act, 1925, so as to provide that restrictions on the density, height, or character of buildings included in a scheme shall not operate so as to require the demolition, removal or alteration of existing buildings, or affect the existing use of those buildings, unless specially brought into operation for that purpose by orders approved by the Ministry; and that, where they are so brought into operation, claims for compensation on account of the demolition or other interference may be made.

“Section V. (2 (b)).—Extension of the Local Authority's power of purchase to include the acquisition of land held in plots too small or inconvenient for the purpose of re-development in accordance with the provisions of an approved scheme—e.g., where new standards of density are imposed on a congested area, in which the houses are in separate ownership—should also be noted.”

Without this power it is not likely to be practicable to secure proper re-development of some of the inner parts of towns where there is land held in plots which are too small to admit of good re-development.

“Section IX.—The removal of the obligation on the Corporation to serve individual notices on owners of property in connection with the preparation and approval of a scheme under the regulations as to procedure made under the Town Planning Act, 1925, unless they have registered their names and addresses with the Corporation for the purpose."

The regulations provide for full public notice by advertisement or otherwise of all stages in the preparation of a scheme, and for individual notice to owners when the draft scheme is prepared by the local authority, when it is deposited as proposed to be approved by the Ministry, and when it is finally approved. It has often been represented to the Ministry that the work of compiling lists of owners for this purpose and keeping them up to date (often over a considerable period) is liable to be heavy and costly even in undeveloped areas if the land is held in small owner-ships. It may become almost prohibitive in areas closely developed with buildings, and the Ministry have in fact received representations to this effect, e.g., from the Town Council of Chester, who have been considering the preparation of a scheme for their town under the powers relating to localities of special architectural and historic interest, but hesitate to undertake one on this particular account.

If this proposal is passed, the Corporation will be still under an obligation (under the Town Planning Regulations) to give full public advertisement of each stage of its procedure—when it passes a resolution to prepare a scheme for an area; when it adopts its preliminary scheme; when the draft scheme has been prepared and deposited; and after it has been provisionally approved by the Ministry (when there is still an opportunity to make objections). In addition, by just registering his name and address, any affected owner can receive individual notices at all stages, as well as the public notices. It appears that these provisions would secure quite adequate safeguards of publicity.

It will be observed that the proposals do not relieve the Corporation of the obligation to give the statutory notices to owners in connection with any acquisition of land for the purposes of a scheme. It may also be mentioned that there is no statutory obligation to notify owners individually of the preparation and approval of bye-laws under the Public Health Acts, which also impose restrictions on the use of land and the erection of buildings.

The above extracts from the representation by the Ministry of Health on the Bill give the official view, but the effect of the application of this method, while it might be reasonable in an area consisting of unbuilt-upon land or land of small value, deprives owners of valuable and important properties in built-up areas of that right which they have hitherto always enjoyed, of going before Parliament and laying their cases before the Legislature, and as regards the provision relating to Section 92 of the Lands Clauses Act, the application of this section is usually limited merely to a certain number of properties which are included in a schedule which is attached to a Private Bill or Act of Parliament.

Section 8 of the Newcastle Act is also worthy of careful study, together with Section 11 (2) of the Town Planning Act, 1925.

Cases will readily occur to the minds of surveyors as to the hardships which might be inflicted on owners by the provisions of this section.

To give instances of the character of injury which might be inflicted by Section 8 (1) (b). Suppose an owner who lives at a distance has leased or let premises to a tenant for the purpose of a garage in an area which has been zoned for the purpose of dwelling-houses. The tenant finding that business is not good in this particular trade begins to use the premises as an engineering works. It would appear that by changing the purpose for which the premises were used he has brought them under the provisions of the Act.

Take, again, premises which at the date of the making of the scheme were used for a shop in an area which is zoned for dwelling-house purposes. If for any reason whatever these premises cease to be occupied for six months, or their user is changed, they are then subject to the restrictions imposed by the scheme.

Another case which is quite common is to find a laundry occupying back land in an area where the general character of the buildings is such as might justify the allocation of this area to a residential zone, and in this case if through any misfortune the premises became unoccupied for six months or upwards, the unfortunate owner would be left with derelict buildings and the site upon his hands as he would be unable to use the buildings again for such a purpose.

It is, however, necessary to take into account the fact that while the Town Planning Act of 1925 is the legal code, the Ministry of Health has issued Model Clauses for use in the preparation of schemes, and as these Clauses were only issued in 1928, it is assumed that they are the result of the experience which the Ministry has gained during the twenty years which have passed since the law of town planning in this country first came into existence. It will presumably, therefore, be necessary to frame model clauses for use in connection with schemes which may be formulated for the dealing with the problems arising in built-up areas.

A few years' delay, while often inconvenient and sometimes costly, in an unbuilt-up area may not be a very serious matter; but when we come to deal with properties having a value running into millions of pounds, as in the Newcastle scheme, it is obvious that such delays, while perfectly necessary in the interests of the scheme as a whole, must be very costly indeed to the owners, and in some cases may form the subject of extremely heavy claims for damages against the corporations concerned. The explanatory memorandum in the Model Clauses says, as regards unbuilt-upon land, "it is important to avoid sterilising . . . particularly in the case of streets which are not likely to be constructed until a long period has elapsed." If, therefore, it is important to avoid sterilisation in the country, it is obviously imperative that sterilisation should not be permitted in a built-up area. I urge, therefore, that in legislation of this nature clauses should be framed to protect owners against losses due to sterilisation, and that until a scheme has become final and operative they should be permitted to proceed with the normal development of their property unless the local authority intimates that they will purchase affected properties at a price to be fixed under the provisions of the Acquisition of Land Act, 1919. It is not reasonable that owners in built-up areas should first be obliged to fight the Council at an enquiry held by an Inspector of the Ministry of Health and if they are successful be placed in the position of finding that the scheme is abandoned, or amended, and be left with no remedy whatever to enable them to recover the costs which they have been obliged to incur in protecting their rights.

There are many other provisions in the Model Clauses which are quite inapplicable to built-up areas. It is easy to zone vacant land, and to allocate shops to one area, works to another, and limitations of the number of houses to be erected per acre to others ; but when one deals with a built-up area and finds that long-sighted persons have purchased property in the expectation that houses, for instance, will ultimately become suitable for conversion into shops, and advances have possibly been made for mortgage purposes on valuations based on this assumption, great hardship would be inflicted on owners if provisions relating to zoning were applied in such instances and they were unable to recover compensation from the local authority for the loss of prospective profits which they had sustained.

Another matter which demands careful consideration is that under the Town Planning Act as it stands a compensation claim is allowed only in respect of property injuriously affected. This, of course, was quite proper when dealing with open land ; but when we come to deal with business premises in built-up areas, it is obvious that provision should be made for a claim for compensation for loss or disturbance of business. It is the owner of the property whose property is injuriously affected who has a claim under the town planning provisions, and there does not appear to me to be any provision by which the occupier can succeed in a claim for compensation under this Act as his property is not affected, and under the Town Planning Act compensation is specifically excluded in certain cases :—

First, if you prescribe the space to be left about buildings ;

Secondly, if you limit the number of buildings to be erected on a particular area, e.g., 4, 8 or 12 houses to the acre ;

Third, there is no compensation in respect of the prescription of the height and character of buildings or the space about buildings.

Therefore, here again, it is quite obvious that the provisions of the Town Planning Act are not suitable for the making of a scheme for a built-up area.

I could elaborate instances of this kind, but I hope that I have indicated generally that before town planning schemes, or, as I prefer to call them, replanning schemes, are launched in respect of built-up areas, Parliament should give careful consideration to a Bill drafted so as to be specifically applicable to those areas, and that legislation dealing with these particular difficulties should be carefully thought out before being placed upon the Statute Book to avoid the danger of laying on what I have previously referred to as the "dead hand," and interfering with the normal development of commercial enterprise in our great cities.

I recommend members to read again the Paper on "Zoning in the Control of Large Cities," read in this room almost exactly seven years ago by Mr. Frank Hunt, who gave particulars of the application of zoning in the United States, and, in view of the tendency of legislation in this country, that Paper, and the excellent discussion which followed, is worth careful study.

Mr. Hunt, as is usual with him, had been quick to notice the following passage in the Second and Final Report of the Unhealthy Areas Committee over which Mr. Neville Chamberlain presided, and as it seems probable that the paragraph in that Report put into the minds of local authorities the possibility of applying the general town planning provisions to built-up areas, I reproduce it here:—

Town Planning built-upon Lands.—We believe that interest in the subject would be greatly stimulated if town planning powers were extended to land already built upon, as is the case in Canada and to some extent in the United States. It is not necessary to introduce any complex conditions or procedure, but local authorities should have the power in the public interest to prescribe the lines of main traffic routes and also to arrange for "zoning" in a built-up area. In this connection we should like to call attention to the evidence of Mr. Lawrence Veiller, secretary to the National Housing Association of the United States. Mr. Veiller informed us that the practice of "zoning"—that is, of dividing a town into a number of districts and then prescribing for each district certain restrictions upon the user and height of buildings as well as the proportion of site to be occupied by them—had been adopted in some 15 cities, of which the most important is New York, and that it had proved a popular and practical innovation. It is significant that where zoning has been adopted after careful preparation of public opinion, no compensation has been paid and no complaints have been made public. It has, in fact, been found that values have been stabilised instead of being disturbed by the process."

In conclusion I think that one of the greatest objections which can be urged against the application of existing town planning law to built-up areas is that in far too many instances the final decision on points which may vitally affect the interests of owners is in the hands of the Ministry of Health, and personally I have no hesitation in saying that I agree with many of the arguments which Lord Hewart has put forward in his book, The New Despotism, published in October last. It seems to me to be certain that if the progress of schemes on unbuilt-upon land is slow, in view of the multiplicity of interests to be dealt with in built-up areas, the progress will be still slower. For that reason I consider that legislation should be enacted only after the most careful consideration and care, and I am satisfied that there is serious danger both to the interests of the community and to property-owners and their tenants if the provisions of the Housing and Town Planning Act of 1925 are merely to be adapted to a class of property for which they were never designed.

I have endeavoured in this Paper to collect a certain amount of information bearing upon this subject without putting forward any extreme views which would justify the town planning experts in saying that in practice none of the difficulties which I foreshadow will occur. I always feel, however, that in construing law we have to look at the actual words of the Act of Parliament and not consider the intentions of its promoters; and while I do not wish to be thought to be an opponent of the principle of replanning of built-up areas, I suggest that the best results will not be obtained by proceeding on the lines of the Newcastle Scheme.

I have referred on page 96 to the Birmingham Bill, but when I wrote this Paper, as this Bill was still before the House of Commons, the position was so indefinite that I was unable to deal with the amendments which had been made.

I am glad to say that during the time the Paper has been in the printers' hands matters have advanced to a stage when I am able to refer to what transpired before the House of Lords Committee in this connection.

This was the first case in which a large number of owners in a built-up area, whose properties were affected by town planning proposals, had offered strong opposition before Parliament. This has resulted in considerable alterations from the powers given to Newcastle in those granted to Birmingham, and if one takes the Newcastle Act for the purpose of comparison, the following alterations will be noted.

After Section 4 a new clause, No. 41 in the Birmingham Bill, appears, viz. :—

“For the prevention of doubt be it enacted that paragraph (d) of Sub-section (2) of Section 5 of the Act of 1925 (which relates to the suspension of statutory enactments) shall not apply to the provisions contained in this Part of this Act.”

Clause 42 of the Birmingham Bill is the same as Section 5 of the Newcastle Act, with the omission of Sub-clause (a) and the addition of the following proviso :—

“Provided that the Corporation shall not under a town planning scheme made in pursuance of this Part of this Act purchase otherwise than by agreement any land abutting on a new street or an existing street as proposed to be widened under such scheme for the purpose of securing the development or re-development of such land.”

Section 6 of the Newcastle Act is repeated in Clause 42 of the Birmingham Bill.

Section 7 of the Newcastle Act is repeated with the addition of the following sub-clause (44 (2) in the Birmingham Bill) :—

“The Corporation shall not be entitled to purchase compulsorily any land which at the date of the Order authorising the compulsory acquisition of the land forms part of any park garden or pleasure ground or is otherwise required for the amenity or convenience of any house without the consent of the owner of such land but such consent shall not be unreasonably withheld and any question whether or not such consent has been unreasonably withheld shall be referred to and determined by an arbitrator to be appointed (failing agreement) by the President of The Surveyors' Institution and the provisions of the Arbitration Act 1889 shall apply to any such reference and determination."

Section 8 of the Newcastle Act down to the end of Clause 1 (b) appears in the Birmingham Bill, but the whole of the remainder of the clause was struck out in the Lords Committee as well as those corresponding to Nos. 9 and 10 in the Newcastle Act, and the following new clauses were inserted in the Birmingham Bill :—

Clause 46.—For the purposes of Sub-section (2) of Section 10 of the Act of 1925 the date of the approval by the Minister of a town planning scheme under this Part of this Act shall be substituted for the several dates referred to in that sub-section.

Clause 47.—Any person who has any interest in property which is acquired compulsorily for the purposes of or in connection with or injuriously affected by a town planning scheme made under this Part of this Act whether as owner mortgagee lessee under-lessee or occupier thereof (including an interest in any trade or business carried on thereon) shall be entitled to compensation under the provisions relating to the compulsory acquisition of land contained in the Act of 1925."

It will therefore be seen that after hearing evidence as to what had transpired in Newcastle, and the probable effect of the application of the Newcastle provisions to built-up areas having been argued on behalf of owners, Parliament considered it prudent to modify the powers which had been granted in previous Acts. The principal result is that the modification of Section 10 of the Act of 1925 by Clause 46 of the Birmingham Bill permits owners to continue to carry on the development of their property, notwithstanding the provisions of the scheme, until the Minister has approved the same, and Clause 47 gives protection to persons interested in property as well as to owners whose land or buildings may be damaged by the proposals of the authority.

As Parliament has amended clauses previously granted to Newcastle and Blackpool after hearing opposition, it is probable that powers granted to other authorities in the future may be modelled on the amendments which have been made in the Birmingham Bill.

Mr. W. TOWNEND (Fellow), after paying tribute to the benefits he had received from membership of The Institution, then proceeded to give a summary of his Paper, which had already been presented to members through the Journal.

A DISCUSSION took place on TOWN PLANNING OF BUILT-UP AREAS.

Mr. SYDNEY A. KELLY (Member of Council), in proposing a vote of thanks, said that the author had fairly stated the position with regard to town planning of built-up areas. Town planning had its purpose to fulfil, and he did not think that any dweller in a provincial city would condemn the excellent plan which was reproduced with the Paper. The city engineer of Newcastle had attempted at once to solve two things, namely, his traffic problem and the re-planning of the whole area concerned. Those who lived in provincial cities knew too well the modern problem of increasing traffic and the concentration of shopping areas.

In Liverpool many Acts were available for defining building lines and purchasing properties, but, nevertheless, there were widenings prescribed forty years ago which had never been brought into effect. Now traffic had won, and tunnels had to be made, not only underneath the river, but through the heights of Everton in order to get access to the new housing schemes. That was due to the lack of town planning, and the Corporation was going to be confronted with a very expensive problem. No doubt Newcastle had found itself in the same plight.

A speeding up of town planning procedure was certainly required, but one had to remember that town planning was only introduced in 1909 and was still unfamiliar in 1914. Then came the years of war and reconstruction, and one could hardly claim, even yet, that town planning had been given a fair start. But as to town planning of built-up areas, in every large city there were slums calling for reconstruction, and town planning was essential if reconstruction on proper lines was to be achieved.

Model Clauses were acceptable to the majority of local authorities promoting town planning schemes. When it came to the town planning of built-up areas he agreed that a new form of Model Clause should be applied. In the case of Newcastle the matter had been, no doubt, a sort of experiment, and the first results did not seem to have been good, but recent legislation was going to remove some of the difficulties in Birmingham and in Derby. If he might make a suggestion it was that when town planning was applied to built-up areas a definite time limit should be imposed upon the whole scheme. The scheme should be carried out in sections, according to urgency, so that each block as it fell to be reconstructed or developed would form a unit bearing a time limit in respect to the whole scheme.

By this means simplification would be achieved, and the trouble that Newcastle had experienced would be removed. Rebuilding could be carried out by agreement between the various owners, or, failing that, by compulsory acquisition of the property by the local authority, who would have power either to rebuild or sell or lease to builders, who would build in accordance with the town planning scheme. It was not beyond the wit of the professional surveyor to apply a remedy to improve the state of affairs in the large towns.

Colonel H. F. COBB, C.B.E. (Fellow), in seconding the vote of thanks, said that he was bound to disagree entirely with the proposer, though he joined with him in appreciation of this most valuable and interesting Paper. The author stated that the members of The Surveyors' Institution were in favour of town planning in principle, and suggested that The Institution would welcome any well-considered Act of Parliament which would enable municipal authorities to correct on built-up areas the errors of those who laid out estates in the past, presuming, of course, that protection was given to the landowners concerned. With that he agreed.

The points arising from the Paper which the speaker desired to emphasise were two: firstly, Was the Town Planning Act of 1925 applicable to developed areas, and, secondly, if not, was a new Act of Parliament required to give general powers to municipal authorities to town plan or re-plan built-up areas? He agreed with the author that an Act of Parliament admittedly intended to provide for the town planning of undeveloped land was not suitable for adaptation in built-up areas. It was true that various corporations which the author had mentioned had obtained powers, but he ventured to think that those powers would never have been granted by Parliament had their true effect been realised by property-owners within the jurisdiction of the authorities in question. The author had described what had been the result of such an Act in Newcastle.

It was stated that the Act of 1925 could be made applicable with the addition of such Model Clauses as the Minister might append. The speaker had actually tried to adapt such Model Clauses as had been drafted to make it applicable, and had failed utterly. He believed Mr. Townend himself and Mr. Gerald Eve had also tried and met with no better success. Possibly other Model Clauses might be drafted by the Minister. But was the Minister to have powers, never intended by Parliament, practically to create new legislation? In his opinion it would be an unprecedented instance of bureaucratic government, of which this country was already a little tired.

The author had referred to the differences between the Newcastle Act and the Birmingham Act. They were considerable, but, as the author suggested, the powers which Birmingham had now been granted would eventually prove of very little use. The Birmingham Bill had been strenuously opposed before the House of Lords Committee, and the speaker desired to take the opportunity of congratulating the Public Trustee and his staff on the steps they had taken to protect the property they had to look after in Birmingham, for they had appreciated what the effect of those Clauses in the Birmingham Bill would be.

As to whether a new Act of Parliament was necessary, which would grant general powers to municipal authorities to town-plan developed areas, personally he would hesitate to support the view that such a measure would be a solution of the problem; in fact, at the moment he did not know that it was even possible. Old-fashioned remedies were very often the best. If a corporation wanted to re-plan or to carry out improvements, it could always proceed by private Bill. That plan had worked well in the past, and he did not see why it should not do so in the future. It would be much fairer to property-owners as a whole and to the community in general.

Mr. G. TURVILLE BROWN (Vice-President) wished to add his tribute of thanks to the author for his exceedingly interesting Paper.

The author had asked a question: Had the time come when the improvement of towns should be undertaken as the result of a code applicable to all municipalities, upon which proposals for improvements of the towns should be framed, or should the improvement of the towns be carried out as in the past by private Bill? There was much to be said on both sides, and he would be interested to hear Mr. Frank Hunt on that subject.

He thought that the title of the Paper, "Town Planning of Built-up Areas," was a misnomer. Town planning, in the proper sense of the term, was entirely applicable under existing laws to building land which was not developed. Our towns were planned, in many instances, hundreds of years ago. They could be reconstructed, but this should not be called town planning. The two things—the development of uncovered land and the bringing up to date of land already covered—were so different that a different title from town planning should be found for the procedure of dealing with covered land. It might be described as reconstruction.

As events in Newcastle had shown, the problems were very great. The hardship to which the author had referred, in the case of owners who were held up for a very considerable period, and then put to much expense without being able to get anything back, was very great, and the sooner conditions were altered so that no more owners had to suffer those hardships the better.

Mr. I. G. GIBBON, C.B.E. (Assistant Secretary, Ministry of Health), (Visitor) said he was exceedingly glad that an outside body like The Institution should be considering the subject of town planning. It was not good that too much of the thinking on those subjects should be left to Government departments. He would not follow the author in his details, there were reasons (not personal) why it was not expedient at the present moment, but there were two or three matters to which he might refer.

However unfortunate, or otherwise, the particular instance in Newcastle, it proved nothing. He would put it to the author that if he wanted an instance which showed the necessity of the application of town planning to built areas he could not have a better instance than that of Newcastle-on-Tyne. For what had happened? A bridge which had been placed over the river had brought a large amount of additional traffic into an area which he understood already was not free from congestion. What man among those present, if he owned Newcastle-on-Tyne, and had to be responsible for its present and future, would not have put the bridge there as part of a general plan, including development in the built areas? It seemed to him that it was obvious sense. He was not blaming the Newcastle Council, for those ideas were comparatively new and their problem was difficult, but he thought that the case of Newcastle was a convincing instance of the urgent necessity of applying town planning to built areas.

There was one other matter of detail in the Paper to which he would like to refer. If he understood aright, the author was of opinion that the application of zoning to built areas was a matter so difficult as to be doubtful of application. That was strange. Several years ago, as the author had reminded them, Mr. Frank Hunt read an interesting Paper to The Institution in which he made some reference to the application of zoning to the cities and towns of the United States. Zoning then was in its infancy. To-day there was scarcely a town of any importance—there were just a few—across the whole breadth of the United States which was not zoned, and, indeed, a town without zoning or equivalent provisions was considered in the States to be a relic of barbarism. Further, among the most ardent supporters of zoning and town planning in the United States were the real estate men, and he had yet to learn that the American real estate man was one who let any main chance pass by. When the first zoning law was applied in the United States—in New York City—in 1915, the proposal had to be submitted to referendum, and some of its strongest advocates were the business men of Fifth Avenue, the principal business street of New York.

He would ask members of The Institution, in looking at the matter from the point of view of the property-owner, to have in mind not simply the effect on the property-owner whose development might or might not be restricted, but also those whose interests were indirectly affected. The experience at the Ministry of Health was that the demand for control came, at least as often as not, from those property-owners who pleaded that a certain proposed development should not be allowed to proceed because their property would be seriously depreciated in value.

He was interested to notice that in The Institution there were still some, if he dared say in kindness, early Victorians surviving, such as Mr. Cobb, who really thought it was still possible to deal with the problem by isolated improvements. One might as well try to make a suit of clothes by first making a trouser leg, then a pocket, then the collar, and so on. A nice mess it would be, and our towns, viewed from the standpoint of modern demands, were in a nice mess also. Something in the nature of planning was inevitable and urgent. Town planning only meant that in order to meet the problem regard was not simply paid to a single improvement, but the needs as a whole were surveyed, exactly as when planning a house. It was difficult to believe that anything else could be common-sense. Take the traffic problem. New roads and wider roads were needed, but if anybody thought the traffic problem was going to be cured simply by traffic remedies he was living in a fool's paradise. If he was not convinced by his own ample experience in this country, let him turn to the United States, which was ten or twenty years ahead of us in her difficulties, and he would find that truth emphasised by the principal traffic experts.

The traffic problem possibly was that which bulked largest, but it was not the only problem, nor in some ways the most important. Take the location of industries. Here was a whole field which was scarcely thought about. He was not denying that there were problems connected with the application of planning to built areas, but if this country wanted to survive and prosper, if it was desired that the towns should continue with any reasonable measure of efficiency, those problems must, and could, be overcome.

On other occasions, on behalf of the Minister of Health, he had had to ask for assistance from The Institution in dealing with a number of problems touching property interests. He had never yet found The Institution fail, not only to place before the Minister the views of property-owners and of other interests, but to look at the whole problem from the broadest standpoint, not only that of property interests in the narrow sense, but in the broader sense, and also the interests of the community. In the application of planning to built areas, there were problems which required a large amount of real hard thought, and he appealed to The Institution for all the help it could render in solving them.

MR. LONGSTRETH THOMPSON (Fellow) said that while the author was mainly concerned to protect the interests of the landowner, he (the speaker) was concerned with protecting the interests of the ratepayer. The author had explained that he refrained from drawing a picture of some of the frightful things that might happen if town planning were applied to built-up areas, but he had also refrained from pointing out the still more frightful things which would certainly happen, in the speaker's opinion, if town planning powers were not applied to such areas. In view of the misgivings expressed by the author, he supposed that they should feel gratified that, on the whole, he had expressed the view that town planning was a good thing.

In summarising the chief points of the Paper, the speaker was glad to find that his own view generally coincided with that of the author's. His main points appeared to be these: (1) That town planning, or re-planning was desirable; (2) that local authorities should have the necessary powers for this purpose; (3) that the extension of the powers in the existing Town Planning Act to built-up areas, or the application of the present town planning powers by means of local Acts, was not desirable; (4) that there should be a new general Act.

He agreed with the author that the procedure by local Acts was a mistake, but he did not think the author had made out his case against the extension of the existing powers to built-up areas. The problems as between the two areas, although different, were not sufficiently different in kind to make the extension of the existing Town Planning Act, with suitable modifications, inapplicable to built-up areas. During the past few years the Town Planning Institution had devoted considerable attention to the problem, and had, in fact, submitted a Memorandum on the subject to the Minister of Health. The conclusion at which the Institute had arrived was that, on the whole, the extension of the present Act to built-up areas would be quite suitable. In the Memorandum in question attention was drawn to the fact that the different Town Planning Acts in the Dominions were largely based on the Act in force in this country, and that in all cases those Acts applied both to built and unbuilt areas, and on the whole had been found to work very well.

Turning to the question of betterment, it had been suggested, and was no doubt true, that some of the schemes for re-planning built-up areas would involve considerable loss to individual owners; but at the same time it seemed to him abundantly clear that if a good scheme of re-planning for a town was put forward, the total result was likely to be one of betterment having regard to the whole area. Whatever the result in a particular case, the net result must be in the direction of betterment. Then came the question of the recovery of betterment. As all members were aware, under the present Act, while compensation was recoverable in full from the local authority, betterment was only recoverable in half from the owner. He did not think there was any logical reason why that should be the case, and full betterment should be made recoverable by any amendment of the existing Act.

There were great difficulties, such as the assessment for compensation and for betterment. Probably the best methods of carrying that out had not yet been arrived at, and other methods in use elsewhere might be noted. He thought the matter of special assessment might be given more extended trial in this country; it had been used in isolated cases. A second method which, so far as he knew, had not been tried in this country although it had been tried with success in Germany, was the pooling of ownerships. That might be done either voluntarily or, if the majority of the owners were not willing, power might be given to local authorities to undertake compulsory pooling. The system merited trial, and would get over certain difficulties experienced by individual owners at the present time.

What Mr. Kelly had said with regard to fixing a timetable for the execution of proposals in a scheme applied more particularly to the case of road improvement, and not so much to the case of zoning. In the case of a road improvement, the fixing of a definite time when it should be put in hand would meet a great deal of the difficulty commonly experienced. The owner would then know exactly where he stood, and could rebuild at once in accordance with the scheme or defer rebuilding until the appointed date as he might consider desirable. The speaker had tried to arrive at the gist of the complaint in the Newcastle case, and he wondered if he would be right in saying that the sting would be removed if the authority had had to pay the costs of the appeal, or, alternatively, the difficulty would not have been insurmountable if a date had been fixed in the manner suggested.

He expressed, in conclusion, his extreme indebtedness to the author for the Paper, which had placed the difficulties of the subject so clearly before them.

MR. FRANK W. HUNT, C.V.O. (Member of Council), said that he had received the impression, listening to the story of Newcastle and Birmingham, that the opposition to those Bills had been designed merely to defeat the authorities concerned, and not to thresh out a proper scheme for the re-development of those two cities. It was not denied that the conditions in Newcastle did require drastic handling. It was not suggested that if the town planning scheme went through as it was designed, and as the notices were served, the owners were going to be robbed of their property. If land were taken, compensation would have been paid; and it seemed childish to suggest that because the owner got compensation under one Act, it was quite wrong for him to accept compensation under another Act with a different title.

The Surveyors' Institution had long since admitted that there should be control over the re-development of older areas. The process in question might be called town planning or re-planning, but it represented a definite ideal with which The Institution had associated itself. He could not think that the Paper submitted that evening, nor certain of the speeches which had followed it, were going in any way to cause The Institution to retreat from that position. For good, or for ill, no Government had yet seen their way to legislate for controlling re-development of the older cities. That such re-development was long overdue was beyond question, and it only remained to consider the best and most expedient way of obtaining powers for that purpose.

It had been suggested to some of the larger authorities that they should seek to obtain for their own areas by means of a Private Bill an extension of the powers conferred by the Town Planning Act, 1925. There was a doubt as to the view taken by the Ministry of Health with regard to the lands to which the Town Planning Act of 1925 would apply. The President would remember a case in the London area which raised the question as to whether land once built on, and likely to be built on again, was quite properly included in a town planning scheme. The Minister said that it was not, but the speaker's biggest opponent—a barrister in the case referred to—assured him that the High Court would take a different view.

It was necessary to remember, in applying re-planning powers to built-up areas, that if under such powers land were taken for street improvements the owner was entitled to compensation. It was well, also, to bear in mind that the application of the Act of 1925 meant that if the owner could substantiate the view that he had suffered injury from the making of the scheme, he was entitled to compensation, not from the taking of the land, but from the making of the scheme. It was true that he was not entitled to claim compensation with regard to limitation of heights of buildings, space about, and proportion of ground to be occupied by the buildings, but here he considered there was no hardship. His idea of town planning was not something silly and fanciful. He had always dissociated himself from what he might call, without offence, the "long-haired" type of town planner. The best definition he knew of town planning was good estate management on the biggest scale. Any sensible body of surveyors or persons qualified to act on the basis that they were the owners of the whole district would take certain action in the way of estate development, and that, in other words, was sound town planning. He had yet to understand how the proper application of that principle could result in anything but added value to the district, considered as a whole. There was no doubt that such a conclusion was sound, and that such a scheme would be for the good of the community as a whole, coupled as it was, under the existing Town Planning Acts, with a right to compensation if the owner was able to satisfy the tribunal that he had, in fact, suffered injury.

Built-up areas, however, were not, as a rule, all in one ownership, and the question was how to deal with a multitude of small owners. That was not a problem to which he could venture to suggest an answer. Another phase of the problem was as to how the authority should meet the cost. He suggested that another meeting might be arranged to consider how the cost of re-developing old cities might be met, bearing in mind that the result of re-development meant added values to the several units of the scheme taken as a whole.

With regard to the Newcastle case, he had wondered whether there was in that case much more than would have occurred if the Newcastle authorities, so far as the widening of the streets was concerned, had applied the provisions of the Public Health Act, 1875. A line could have been prescribed. How in the world those circumstances would have differed from the taking of land under the town planning provisions in the Newcastle Bill he did not know. The Bill itself did not give compulsory powers of acquisition. It gave the local authority power to make an order, and that order would take the usual form and be submitted to the Minister of Health for confirmation after local enquiry. When the order was confirmed, it would have the force of an Act of Parliament, and the Acquisition of Land Act would then apply. Again, beyond the fact that it might be a simpler thing to get those powers in a private Bill, he did not understand where any vital difference lay.

Mr. SYDNEY F. BARTON (Fellow) said he was anxious to correct the impression that The Surveyors' Institution stood for the property-owner first, second, and all the time. That was not the general view in The Institution itself, which was second to none in public spirit. The whole thing resolved itself into the question: Were they, or were they not, satisfied with things as they stood? Everyone was aware of the traffic problems, and also of the conditions under which many thousands of people had to live and work. If the state of affairs was not satisfactory, it followed that change was necessary, and the best way of bringing it about had to be discovered. Private Bills took a long time to get through and were expensive. He thought it should not be difficult to devise legislation which would apply to built-up areas.

The PRESIDENT, in closing the discussion, said that Mr. Longstreth Thompson had referred to a communication which had been made by the Town Planning Institute to the Ministry of Health. He did not know whether that was a private or a public document, but if it was available it would be quite useful for members to consider in the light of it the problems associated with this very difficult subject.

It was not easy to dissociate oneself altogether from one's own experience in the matter. Mr. Hunt had referred to a case in which the speaker was also interested. That case illustrated one phase of the question, namely, that town planning of built-up areas was not only a matter of street improvements and street widenings, but that it was the intention to include in legislation which dealt with those, other things which in London they were accustomed to find in the Building Acts. The difficulty of applying to a particular area regulations and restrictions which were not to apply to areas outside the scheme not radically dissimilar constituted one side of the problem.

The Institution had been fortunate that evening in having had the expression of fairly direct opinion on both sides, but he was sure that The Institution did desire to make a contribution if it could to the solution of this most difficult problem. They were all agreed that there were circumstances and conditions in the lay-out of towns and cities, and conditions under which people lived therein, which could not be tolerated by the conscience of the present day, and it was necessary to see in what direction it was possible to alter the existing state of things. The alteration must take place with the least possible disturbance and loss to the individuals affected. He thought that on the one hand town planners were rather too sanguine with regard to the financial results of their schemes, but that on the other what was possible was not necessarily bounded by the condition of their being able to show a net return from what was done. The community ought to be prepared to face an expenditure to secure improved conditions, and he did not think that any scheme ought to be considered satisfactory if based on the suggestion that because one person, or even the total number of persons, were to be benefited, therefore the persons who happened to be injured need not be adequately compensated.

Speaking personally, and not as President, he could not agree that the provisions of the Town Planning Act, 1925, whereby no compensation was payable in respect of restrictions on height of, and as to space about, buildings and width of streets, might suitably be applied to the replanning of built areas. He thought that a great deal of hardship might be inflicted upon the owners of property and building areas by measures which might be enforced under town planning legislation of that kind.

He then put the vote of thanks to Mr. Townend, which was accorded by acclamation.

Mr. TOWNEND, in reply, said that he was much gratified by the discussion which had taken place on the Paper. Referring to Mr. Hunt's question as to whether the position of the owner would have been any different if the acquisition of the property had been undertaken under other Acts, he thought there would have been this great difference, viz., that under town planning powers the owner never knew when the blow would fall. On the other hand, if an inquiry were held, and it was decided that a man's property was to be taken, at any rate he knew where he was. If a private Bill went through, he knew that within the term stated in the Bill his property would be acquired. But under town planning he could not get his compensation until the scheme had become final, and it was no consolation to a man in, say, 1925, to know that while he would be damaged if the scheme went through, yet, judging by the result of the statistics given in the appendix to the Paper, his grandchildren might possibly be able to recover compensation. That was the reason why many of them thought that a new code should be drawn up which would permit of town planning schemes being applied to built-up areas, and which would do away with the great hardships inflicted on owners if the provisions of the Act of 1925 were spatchcocked on to some private Bill. That was the whole idea underlying the Paper.

With regard to betterment, he agreed with Mr. Longstreth Thompson that that should be applied. He was delighted to hear Mr. Gibbon's remarks. Like himself, Mr. Gibbon believed in town planning; the only question between them was the method of application. Mr. Gibbon liked the sword to come down with the slow invincible stroke of a heavy weapon; he, on the contrary, preferred the quick rapier thrust.

Colonel Cobb was, of course, out and out against town planning; but, on the other hand, he did suggest that municipal authorities might get all they required by private Bills. The speaker, however, thought that there were many cases where the drafting of a simple code would be a great benefit to many areas, and would expedite replanning in places where it was urgently needed, with benefit to the country as a whole. He also agreed with Mr. Kelly that it would be much better to have a totally new code for built-up areas instead of applying the 1925 Act with all its additions and cross-referencing. If there was to be a replanning of the built-up areas, let it be on a code specially designed for the purpose, and not by reference to an Act designed for something entirely different.

PAPER 525.

THE RATING AND VALUATION (APPORTIONMENT) ACT, 1928.

By James L. Milne (Fellow) (Special Rating Diploma).

To be read at the Ordinary General Meeting of The Surveyors' Institution on Monday, 10th February, 1930.

The main purpose of this Act, which received the Royal Assent on 3rd August, 1928, was to make provision for the preliminary work necessary before effect could be given to the Rating Relief Scheme announced in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's 1928 Budget speech. The Act does not in itself give relief from rates in respect of any class or classes of hereditaments. This relief is effected by the Local Government Act, 1929, and the Agricultural Rates Act, 1929, to which references will be made in the course of this Paper.

The rating relief scheme was designed to give total or partial exemption from rates to—

- (a) Agricultural Hereditaments ;
- (b) Industrial Hereditaments ;
- (c) Freight Transport Hereditaments ;

the extent of such exemption of any hereditament being dependent upon the class and circumstances of user of the hereditament.

In the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (referred to in this Paper as "the Act") provision was made in Section 1 for agricultural, industrial and freight-transport hereditaments to be distinguished in valuation lists from each other and from all other hereditaments. Effect was given to this by the preparation in each rating area of a preliminary draft special list under Section 1 (3) and the First Schedule to the Act, which, after a process of deposit by the rating authority and approval by the assessment committee, became a special list. As from 1st October, 1929, the special list became part of the valuation list for the rating area, the valuation list in force for the rating area on that date then having effect as if the particulars for any hereditament included in the special list were substituted for the particulars appearing in the valuation list.

(a) Agricultural Hereditaments.

Under Section 2 of the Act the expression "agricultural hereditament" means any hereditament being agricultural land or agricultural buildings defined as follows:—

" 'Agricultural land' means any land used as arable meadow or pasture ground only, land used for a plantation or a wood, or for the growth of saleable underwood, land exceeding one-quarter of an acre used for the purpose of poultry farming, cottage gardens exceeding one-quarter of an acre, market gardens, nursery grounds, orchards or allotments, including allotment gardens within the meaning of the Allotments Act, 1922, but does not include land occupied together with a house as a park, gardens (other than as aforesaid), pleasure grounds, or land kept or preserved mainly or exclusively for purposes of sport or recreation, or land used as a racecourse; and for the purpose of this definition the expression 'cottage garden' means a garden attached to a house occupied as a dwelling by a person of the labouring classes;

'Agricultural buildings' means buildings (other than dwelling-houses) occupied together with agricultural land or being or forming part of a market garden, and in either case used solely in connection with agricultural operations thereon."

It will be observed that the definitions of "agricultural land" under the Agricultural Rates Acts, 1896 and 1923, have been extended to cover woodlands and also land exceeding one-quarter of an acre used for the purpose of poultry farming.

The definition of "agricultural buildings" is identical with the wording of paragraph 2 of the first column of Part II. of the Second Schedule of the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, under which agricultural buildings were accorded a 75 per cent. deduction of the net annual value in arriving at rateable value.

Under Section 67 of the Local Government Act, 1929, no person is to be liable to pay rates in respect of any agricultural land or agricultural buildings in respect of any period beginning on or after 1st October, 1929, or to be deemed to be in occupation thereof for rating purposes, and no such land or buildings are to be included in any rate made in respect of a period beginning on or after that date.

For the purpose of valuation lists in operation on 1st October, 1929, agricultural land and agricultural buildings are to be deemed to have no rateable value, and no particulars with respect to such land or buildings are to be included in any subsequent valuation list.

Under the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, agricultural land and agricultural buildings as therein defined were relieved from rating to the extent of three-quarters of the net annual value. Under the Local Government Act, 1929, and the Agricultural Rates Act, 1929, the relief is extended to cover the remaining one-quarter. In the case of woodlands and land exceeding one-quarter of an acre used for the purpose of poultry farming the total exemption now enjoyed is entirely due to those Acts.

The effect of the Agricultural Rates Act, 1929, was to ante-date by six months, i.e., from 1st April, 1929, instead of 1st October, 1929, the exemption of agricultural hereditaments from rates and to provide for a compensating Exchequer grant to rating authorities. A right is conferred upon the occupier of an agricultural hereditament to withhold payment of rates for that period of six months, a condition being that the hereditament must be shown as an agricultural hereditament in a draft special list or special list. If rates have been paid on such an agricultural hereditament for the period in question, there is a right to repayment.

The question whether land or buildings have the status of agricultural land or agricultural buildings is generally one of fact, which can be decided without much difficulty. There are cases, however, in which it is not easy to decide whether land is of the nature of pleasure grounds or is kept or preserved mainly or exclusively for purposes of sport or recreation. This question is often particularly difficult in reference to woodlands used in connection with the preservation of game, but the writer finds it difficult to prescribe any guiding principles, and is of opinion that each case falls to be determined upon its particular merits.

The question of the proper method of dealing with rights of sporting over agricultural land is proving extremely troublesome to rating authorities and assessment committees, and it is unfortunate that several opportunities of removing the difficulty by legislation have been neglected.

Under the Rating Act, 1874, rights of fowling, of shooting, of taking or killing game or rabbits and of fishing, when severed from the occupation of the land, were made rateable. That Act provides, inter alia, that where any such right is severed from the occupation of the land and is not let, and the owner of such right receives rent for the land, the said right shall not be separately valued or rated, but the gross and rateable values of the land shall be estimated as if the said right were not severed.

The view adopted by the Local Government Board for the purposes of grants to local authorities under the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, was that the provision in Section 6 (1) of the Rating Act, 1874, should be read together with Section 5 (a) of the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, which required that in every valuation list the value of agricultural land should be stated separately from that of any building or other hereditament.

In the Second Series of Representations of the Central Valuation Committee, the Committee, while recognising that the matter was not entirely free from doubt, recommended with a view to securing uniformity of practice in the future, that, until the High Court otherwise decides, rating and other authorities in preparing and revising new valuation lists to be made under the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, should, where the land over which any reserved sporting right is exercised is agricultural land, enter the rateable value of the agricultural land as distinct from the value of the reserved sporting right in column 10c of the valuation lists under the head of "Agricultural Land," and the value of the reserved sporting right in column 9 of the list under the head of "Hereditaments not specified in later columns."

In rating areas where the recommendation of the Central Valuation Committee has been followed, assessment committees are constantly having cases before them in which the occupier contends that the insertion of the value of such sporting rights in column 9, which involves liability for full rates on such sporting rights, is, in effect, a separate valuation or rating of the sporting rights, which is prohibited by Section 6 (1) of the Rating Act, 1874. Sometimes there is quoted in support of this contention Section 67 of the Local Government Act, 1929, under which the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, is repealed and as from 1st October, 1929, no person is to be deemed to be in occupation of agricultural land for rating purposes, no such land is to be included in any rate made on or after that date and no particulars of agricultural land are to be included in any future valuation list.

In areas where the procedure has been to include the reserved sporting value with the value of the land, the effect being to de-rate the sporting value, Revenue officers have in many cases served notices of appeal to Quarter Sessions, and consequently assessment committees find themselves in a serious dilemma.

A solution of the difficulty may result from a test case in the High Court, but an unfortunate feature is that should the Courts eventually decide that the view of Revenue officers is erroneous, then rating authorities who have rejected the advice of the Central Valuation Committee and have included the value of reserved sporting rights with the value of the agricultural land will receive Government grants, including compensation for loss of rateable value on the sporting rights; whereas rating authorities who have followed the Central Valuation Committee's advice will be unable to maintain their assessments on such reserved sporting rights, and will, apparently, receive no compensation by way of grants for the loss of rateable value unless the position has been safeguarded by serving notices of objection to special lists, or by making application to assessment committees under paragraph 9 of the First Schedule to the Act.

(b) Industrial Hereditaments.

An industrial hereditament is a hereditament (not being a freight-transport hereditament) occupied and used as a mine or mineral railway or, subject to certain qualifications, as a factory or workshop.

The Act defines the expression "mine" in Section 3 (4) as follows:—

"'Mine' has the meaning assigned to it by section one hundred and twenty-two of the Coal Mines Act, 1911, or section forty-one of the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872, as amended by sub-section (2) of section nineteen of the Mining Industry Act, 1920, as the case may require, but also includes any premises, place, or works, whether below ground or above ground, primarily occupied and used for the purpose of draining or otherwise protecting from damage any mine or group of mines or occupied and used for pumping or raising brine for the purpose of manufacture or sale from shafts, wells, springs, or mines."

The Coal Mines Act, 1911, applies to coal, stratified ironstone, shale, and fire-clay mines, and in Section 122 assigns the following meaning to the word "mine":—

"'Mine' includes every shaft in the course of being sunk, and every level and inclined plane in the course of being driven, and all the shafts, levels, planes, works, tramways, and sidings, both below ground and above ground, in and adjacent and belonging to the mine, but does not include any part of such premises on which any manufacturing process is carried on, other than a process ancillary to the getting, dressing or preparation for sale of minerals."

The Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872, covers all mines other than those covered by the Coal Mines Act, 1911, and the word "mine" is defined as follows:—

"The term 'mine' includes every shaft in the course of being sunk, and every level and inclined plane in the course of being driven for commencing or opening any mine, or for searching for or proving minerals, and all the shafts, levels, planes, works, machinery, tramways, and sidings both below ground and above ground, in and adjacent to a mine, and any such shaft, level, and inclined plane, and belonging to the mine. The term 'shaft' includes pit."

This definition is amended by Section 19 (2) of the Mining Industry Act, 1920, which brings the definition into approximate accord with that of the Coal Mines Act, 1911. Section 19 (2) provides:—

"For the purposes of the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Acts, 1872 and 1875, the expression 'mine' does not include any part of the premises on which any manufacturing process, other than a process ancillary to the getting, dressing or preparation for the sale of minerals is carried on."

Mineral-producing hereditaments not covered by the above definitions do not rank as mines, but derive their qualification as industrial hereditaments from the Factory and Workshop Acts. This distinction may be of importance in determining whether a mineral railway has the status of an industrial hereditament.

A central mines rescue station used for the protection of both life and property was at the Derbyshire Quarter Sessions held to be an industrial hereditament, on the ground that it was primarily occupied for the purpose of draining or otherwise protecting a mine or mines from damage (North Midlands Colliery-Owners' Rescue Stations Company v. S.E. Derbyshire Assessment Committee and the Revenue Officer). A similar decision was also given at the West Riding Quarter Sessions in the case of the Barnsley Collieries Rescue Station.

The expression "a mineral railway" for the purposes of the Act means—

“A railway, tramway, or ropeway used primarily for the transport of minerals gotten from a mine, or from two or more mines, to a freight-transport hereditament or between any two such hereditaments or to any dock not being a freight-transport hereditament, and in the latter case includes also such dock.”

In order to have the status of an industrial hereditament a mineral railway must not be a freight-transport hereditament, and the property must fulfil certain conditions. The minerals, for the transport of which it is primarily used, must be gotten from a mine, not from a mineral-producing hereditament which is not a mine. The transport of the minerals must be to a freight-transport hereditament or between any two such hereditaments, or to a dock not being a freight-transport hereditament. In the last-mentioned case the dock will also be included in the term “mineral railway,” and be treated as an industrial hereditament.

A hereditament occupied and used as a factory or workshop is an industrial hereditament unless it is primarily occupied and used for the following purposes or for any combination of such purposes :—

- (a) The purposes of a dwelling-house ;
- (b) The purposes of a retail shop ;
- (c) The purposes of distributive wholesale business ;
- (d) The purposes of storage ;
- (e) The purposes of a public supply undertaking ;
- (f) Any other purposes, whether or not similar to any of the foregoing, which are not those of a factory or workshop.

The expressions “factory” and “workshop” have respectively the same meaning as in the Factory and Workshop Acts 1901-1920, and it is necessary to turn to Section 149 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, and the Sixth Schedule to that Act, as amended by Section 1 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1907, to ascertain what is covered by the expressions “factory” and “workshop.”

Section 149, and the Sixth Schedule of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, as amended, have already been set out in full on page 141 of Volume VIII. of the Journal.

Where the qualification of premises as an industrial hereditament depends upon whether they rank as a factory or workshop, it is necessary carefully to consider their status under the provisions of the Factory and Workshop Acts. A point of some importance appears to be that the condition of manual labour being exercised in the premises by way of trade or for purposes of gain does not apply in the case of a textile factory or any premises or places mentioned in Part 1 or Part 2 of the Sixth Schedule except in connection with the following :—

“Electrical stations where there is a condition that the generation or transformation of electrical energy must be ‘for the purpose of supply by way of trade or for the lighting of any street, public place or public building or of any hotel or of any railway, mine or other industrial undertaking.’

“Bakehouses which are defined as ‘any places in which are baked bread, biscuits or confectionery from the baking or selling of which a profit is derived.’

“Laundries carried on by way of trade or for the purpose of gain, or carried on as ancillary to another business or incidentally to the purposes of any public institution.”

It is difficult, having regard to the foregoing, to appreciate the grounds upon which the Revenue officer has been able successfully to contend before the Colchester Assessment Committee that a gravel pit worked by the County Council primarily for their own purposes is not an industrial hereditament. The condition as to trade or purposes of gain does not apply to a mineral-producing hereditament, and the purpose for which the minerals are gotten does not appear to have any bearing on the point whether the purposes of occupation or user are those of a factory or workshop. The author's view is that as a gravel-pit is definitely a factory or workshop the purpose of the occupation and use of the factory or workshop is the getting of gravel, and that no other condition has to be satisfied to give a gravel-pit status as an industrial hereditament. In the case of a gravel-pit occupied by an Urban District Council, the Revenue officer contended unsuccessfully at Surrey Quarter Sessions that the property was not an industrial hereditament. In this case it was pleaded that the Council sold material from the pit to the County Council, but as occupation by way of trade or for purposes of gain is not a necessary condition in the case of a gravel-pit, the point appears to lack relevance.

The maxim that "a penny saved is a penny earned" does not apparently apply where trade or purposes of gain is a condition of status as a factory or workshop, as the decided cases appear to indicate that the purposes of gain must be direct. In Caledonian Railway Company v. Paterson (1898) it was held that an hotel laundry in which the hotel linen, hotel servants' clothes, and visitors' clothes were washed, the last named for payment, was not carried on by way of trade or for purposes of gain. In Curtis v. Skinner (1906) the labour of persons in the employment of a fishing-boat owner who were engaged in mending the employer's own nets was held by the King's Bench Division not to be exercised by way of trade or for purposes of gain. Under these decisions it would appear that many laundries and other properties, such as estate saw-mills where trade is not exercised or commodities are not sold, are not factories or workshops within the meaning of the Factory and Workshop Acts.

Section 69 of the Local Government Act provides for the case of premises where the owner or occupier is the only person working therein by adding the following to Section 3 (2) of the Act:—

"a hereditament shall not be deemed not to be occupied and used as a factory or workshop by reason only of the fact that the owner or occupier of the hereditament is the only person working therein or that no other person working therein is in his employment."

When a decision has been reached as to whether the hereditament has the status of a factory or workshop, it is necessary to consider whether it is disqualified from being an industrial hereditament under (a) to (f) of the proviso to Section 3 (1) of the Act, and it is upon this point that the majority of the large number of contested cases have arisen.

The point emerges from the cases already decided at Quarter Sessions that the hereditament the status of which falls to be considered is the hereditament as assessed in the valuation list, not a part thereof nor a combination of separately assessed hereditaments. A proposal can, however, be made by an occupier or an owner for a division of a hereditament as assessed, and for one or more of the resulting parts to be treated as industrial, and any such proposal will fall to be determined by the assessment committee.

A combination of two or more hereditaments separately assessed must, under certain conditions, be treated as being one hereditament for the purpose of determining whether the individual hereditaments are industrial hereditaments. The conditions are that the properties must be within the same curtilage or contiguous to one another, that they are in the same occupation, and that they are used as parts of a single mine, mineral railway, factory, or workshop.

The two points which give rise to difficulty are whether the properties are contiguous, and whether in the case of a factory or workshop they form part of a single factory or workshop under the Factory and Workshop Acts.

The proper interpretation of the word "contiguous" will probably be the subject of a case in the High Court at no distant date, but it is interesting to note that in the case of Revenue Officer v. Southwark Assessment Committee and R. Hoe & Co., Limited, the Solicitor-General is reported to have said:—

"My short submission upon the matter is that it would be an unreasonable application of the word 'contiguous' to hold that premises 230 yards apart upon opposite sides of the road—if, indeed, that question arises at all—can be considered to be contiguous. I look at, if I may, and I adopt the definition in Stroud's Judicial Dictionary, which tells me that 'contiguous,' as it suggests, means touching, and is as nearly as possible the synonym of 'adjoining.' I accept that, except that I do not find it necessary to submit that the premises must necessarily be touching. If they are separated by a street, or by an alleyway, or separated by some space that is used as a yard, or something of that kind, if they are merely separated by something which, whilst it separates them, still leaves it reasonable for the Court to consider them as adjoining premises, then I should feel constrained to admit they might well be considered contiguous; but once you get to 50 yards, or 100 yards, or 150 yards, or 200 yards, and then 230 yards away, one is getting into the realm of something which is quite apart from being contiguous. The fact is that they are neighbouring premises, which, as premises in the same neighbourhood are conveniently used, no doubt, for the purposes of this business. But, in my submission, it cannot be said that they are in any sense contiguous to one another. There has been a case in which it was held that two houses immediately opposite one another were contiguous, because each would include the soil of the street in between. I think I indicated that, in the view that the Crown takes of this matter, that would be something we would not wish to dispute. It is a question of degree, and we say that at some distance some line must be drawn. We say that 230 yards has gone a long way past it. That is the only point."

Mr. Tindal Atkinson in reply is reported to have said:—

"My learned friend the Solicitor-General spoke about 40 yards, 50 yards, and 230 yards. I do not understand exactly where the break comes; that is to say, whether he would be prepared to say, in any case apart from the particular facts, whether 40 yards was the limit or whether 50 yards was the limit. On a certain set of facts 'contiguous' might require you to hold that (we will say) 50 yards was not contiguous, and on another set of facts, which I suppose just shortly to detail to you, that 230 yards, having regard to the position of the respondents and the business they carry on, is quite contiguous enough for the purposes of construing that section."

The Chairman, in announcing the decision of the Court, is reported to have said:—

"We do not wish to hear anything more unless the Solicitor-General has anything to add. We wish to say at once that it is perfectly clear on the evidence, without dealing with the word 'contiguous' at all, that this is one business, carried on in one factory, operating and working in this way, owing to the fact that the company are not able to have all their buildings under one roof. It happens that part of the work is done in one building, and part in another, but they are all used for producing the same result.

I think that a very unfortunate word has been used in this statute. I do not think that you, Mr. Solicitor, are responsible for it. The word 'contiguous' in the ordinary sense, of course, does suggest something, but I think if you read on you see what was meant. It goes on to say '... are used as part of a single mine, mineral railway, factory, or workshop." The meaning is indicated there. Is it one workshop, although the parts may be separate? That is the view which we take of the section. We think that this case comes within that, and that therefore the appeal must be dismissed with costs. We are not deciding what the word 'contiguous' means; we are deciding the sense of it."

The proviso to Section 3 (1) is undoubtedly the most difficult part of the Act to interpret. The author submits that the proviso should be read as a whole for the purpose of interpretation, and that it is unsound to interpret individually the six paragraphs (a) to (f) by the adoption of varying principles except where a variation of principle is clearly the intention of the Act.

The paragraphs (a) to (f) of the proviso are dealt with seriatim below, and the view of the author indicated in regard to each.

(A) "the purposes of a dwelling-house."

In dealing with a property which, as assessed, includes a dwelling-house in addition to a factory or workshop, the test appears to be whether the primary or cardinal reason for the occupation is to occupy the dwelling-house or the factory or workshop. To put it another way, if the occupation of the dwelling-house can be said to be of greater importance in the occupation of the whole than the occupation of the factory or workshop, then the premises should not rank as an industrial hereditament.

(B) "the purposes of a retail shop."

A common instance is a bakehouse occupied and assessed together with a baker's shop and perhaps a dwelling-house. The bread manufactured in the bakehouse may be partly sold in the shop and partly retailed by means of delivery vehicles. The point to be decided is whether the main or primary reason for the occupation of the entire property is to carry out the manufacturing process in the bakehouse. Usually this point has been decided in the negative, and it has been held that the primary reason for the occupation was to carry on a retail trade in the shop, combined with the use of the living accommodation. The difficulty has sometimes been avoided by placing a separate assessment on the bakehouse and then dealing with it on its separate merits. If the bakehouse is occupied and used primarily for the purpose of manufacturing goods to be sold through the shop, it may be that the disqualification would still apply; but there appears to be some doubt whether a hereditament which, as assessed, does not include premises which satisfy the definition of a retail shop can be said to be occupied for the purposes of a retail shop. The purposes of a retail shop are the sale of goods by retail and/or the carrying on of retail trade or business (including repair work). These purposes, within the meaning of the Act, do not appear to include the manufacture of goods for sale in the shop or repair work done in connection with the retail business carried on in the shop, if such manufacture or repair work is carried out in separately rated premises. This view is supported by the decision of the London Quarter Sessions in the case of Revenue Officer v. H. P. Buckingham and Partners. In that case a motor repair workshop was held to be an industrial hereditament although used in conjunction with, and apparently for, the purposes of a Ford service dépôt (which included a show room) held previously by the Court to be within the definition of a retail shop.

Under the definition in Section 3 (4) the expression "retail shop" includes any premises of a similar character where retail trade or business (including repair work) is carried on. Revenue officers have shown a tendency to plead that the disqualification in Section 3 (1) (b) applies where the business carried on is mainly of a retail nature apart from the question whether the premises are "of a similar character" to a retail shop. It is interesting to note the opinion of the Court in Buckingham's case that a repair shop is not a retail shop, and that something more is necessary as in the previous case.

(c) "the purposes of distributive wholesale business."

These words have proved exceptionally difficult of interpretation, and until they have been the subject of a decision in the High Court an opinion as to their meaning can only be expressed with reserve.

It is necessary for every manufacturer to have a system of distribution of his products. It appears therefore to be clear that distribution of those products from the manufactory, being a normal incident of a manufacturer's business and therefore one of the purposes of a factory or workshop, is not distributive wholesale business within the meaning of the Act.

The provisions of Section 3 (3), under which parts of a single factory separately assessed are to be treated as if they formed parts of a single hereditament, provided that they are within the same curtilage or contiguous to one another, appear to indicate that failing such situation or contiguity parts of a factory are to be dealt with according to their separate merits. A logical conclusion is that premises occupied for the distributive or other purposes of a manufacturing business but remote from the manufactory are to be dealt with by reference to their separate merits, and are not necessarily to be considered as industrial because they are mainly occupied for purposes which at the manufactory itself would be deemed to be industrial purposes. If, however, this represents the intention of the Act, it would appear to follow that a factory or workshop, occupied in connection with distributive wholesale business carried on elsewhere, should be treated on its separate merits and not denied status as an industrial hereditament on the ground that the object of production in the factory is to provide commodities to be disposed of in the main business of wholesale distribution, carried on by the occupier in other premises.

To put the point shortly, if a manufacturer's distributive purposes in separate premises are not industrial purposes although covered by the Factory and Workshop Acts, then a wholesale distributor's manufacturing purposes in separate premises should be deemed to be industrial purposes. Revenue officers should not be able to succeed both ways.

It appears to the author from his perusal of reports of cases heard by Courts of Quarter Sessions that counsel for Revenue officers have not been consistent in their arguments upon this legal question. In the case of Revenue Officer v. Priestleys, Limited, and Bradford Assessment Committee the premises of the respondent company at Vicar Lane, Leeds, were used for receiving from the dyers cloth previously made by the company at their mills at Idle, Thornton, and Laisterdyke, and subjecting the cloth to a process of examination, burling, mending, perching, stamping and making ready for delivery. Counsel for the Revenue officer contended that the Recorder was not entitled to look at the other hereditaments at all as they were self-contained. He must look at this one hereditament and see whether it qualified.

The contrary view appears to have been urged successfully by the Solicitor-General in the case of Lovell and Christmas, Limited, v. Revenue Officer with reference to the appellant company's premises in Hosier Lane, Smithfield. The premises were occupied for the manufacture of pasteurised and packet cheeses, margarine blending, butter blending, and box-making. The appellants had other premises close by used for retailing such goods as butter and cheese, and they were well known-wholesale provision merchants. The Solicitor-General is reported as having said that the primary purpose for which the premises were occupied was for storage and for wholesale distribution. They were situate in the heart of Smithfield, and were really a depôt for receiving goods in bulk for distribution. They were only a part of another business carried on by the appellants quite close.

It had been argued in a number of cases on behalf of Revenue officers, not always with success, that processes such as butter blending, the preparation of packet cheese from ordinary cheese, the pasteurisation of milk, &c., are ancillary to wholesale distribution, and, for example, that butter blending in itself is not manufacturing as the butter comes into the premises as butter and goes out as butter.

This argument appears to have no real bearing upon the point at issue. The purposes of a factory or workshop must, the author submits, include impartially all purposes specified in the relevant provisions of the Factory and Workshop Acts. Adapting an article for sale in premises has as much effect in giving the premises status as a factory or workshop as has a complete manufacturing process from a raw material to a finished article. If premises are occupied primarily for purposes which give those premises status as a factory or workshop, then they should be deemed to rank as an industrial hereditament.

(D) "purposes of storage."

It is generally agreed that these words do not cover storage, in a factory, of raw material awaiting use and the products of the factory awaiting despatch. Such storage is a necessity in a factory, and the storage accommodation is part of the factory. Some difficulty has been experienced in the interpretation of these words in relation to premises used for cold-storage purposes. On the one side it is often contended that the essential purpose of occupation is storage, and that the lowering of the temperature in the premises is to create conditions suitable to the storage of food just as in a furniture store steps have to be taken to heat the premises to maintain suitable storage conditions. On the other side it may be urged that the words apply to simple storage only, and do not apply where the commodities stored are subjected to a process such as refrigeration.

(E) "the purposes of a public supply undertaking."

The expression "public supply undertaking" means any undertaking primarily carried on for the supply of gas, water, electricity or hydraulic power for public purposes, or to members of the public, or to any one or more undertakings carried on under any special Act or Order having the force of an Act.

The purposes of a public supply undertaking cover, doubtless, the manufacture of gas, pumping of water, generation of electricity or hydraulic power and all factory and workshop purposes of such an undertaking. It appears to be important to consider each case on its merits and to decide whether the conditions of the definition are fulfilled.

The author suggests that in the proviso to Section 3 (1) of the Act the wording of paragraph (e) indicates a somewhat different principle from that involved in the wording of paragraphs (a), (b), and (c). Paragraphs (a) and (b) appear to apply to any premises which are a dwelling-house or a retail shop respectively or necessary to the enjoyment or occupation thereof. In paragraph (c) "distributive" "wholesale business" does not appear necessarily to mean "a distributive wholesale business" so as to cover all the purposes of such a business, whereas "the purposes of a" "public supply undertaking" appear to cover all purposes of such an undertaking.

(F) "any other purposes, whether or not similar to any of the foregoing, which are not those of a factory or workshop."

This paragraph renders it an essential condition that to rank as an industrial hereditament premises must be primarily occupied and used for the purposes of a factory or workshop. The author submits, however, that each separately assessed hereditament must be treated according to its separate merits as indicated in his remarks in reference to earlier paragraphs of the proviso, subject, however, to the application of Section 3 (3) of the Act in appropriate cases.

APPORTIONMENT OF THE VALUE OF INDUSTRIAL HEREDITAMENTS.

When it has been decided that a hereditament is an industrial hereditament, it is, under Section 4 (1) of the Act, to be shown in the valuation list (of which the special list now forms part) as occupied and used wholly for industrial purposes or partly for industrial purposes as the circumstances may require. In the latter case the net annual value is to be apportioned between the occupation and user of the hereditament for industrial purposes and for other purposes respectively.

The hereditament is to be deemed to be occupied and used for industrial purposes except in so far as any part thereof is, under the Act or under the enactments relating to the regulation of mines, factories and workshops, to be deemed neither to be, nor to form part of, a mine, factory, or workshop (Section 4 (2) (a)).

The parts to be deemed neither to be, nor to form part of, a mine, factory, or workshop, and which therefore are to be regarded as not occupied for industrial purposes, are—

Under the Act.

Any place used by the occupier for the housing or maintenance of his road vehicles or as stables, notwithstanding that it is situate within the close, curtilage or precincts forming a factory or workshop and used in connection therewith.

Under the Coal Mines Act, 1911, and the Metalliferous Mines Act, 1872, as amended by Section 19 (2) of the Mining Industry Act, 1920.

Any part of the hereditament not covered by the definitions of the term "mine" in these enactments as extended by Section 3 (4) of the Act.

Any part of the premises of a mine on which any manufacturing process is carried on, other than a process ancillary to the getting dressing or preparation for sale of minerals. (Note.—Such a part of the premises might, however, qualify as an industrial hereditament as being a factory or workshop.)

Under the Factory and Workshop Acts.

A room solely used for the purpose of sleeping therein (Section 149 (3), Factory and Workshop Act, 1901).

A place situate within the close, curtilage or precincts forming a factory or workshop if solely used for some purpose other than the manufacturing process or handicraft carried on in the factory or workshop; but such place, if otherwise it would be a factory or workshop, shall be deemed to be a separate factory or workshop (Section 149 (4), Factory and Workshop Act, 1901). (Note.—Such a separate factory or workshop might presumably be deemed to be occupied for industrial purposes.)

If the net annual value of an industrial hereditament does not exceed £50 or where the part of the net annual value of an industrial hereditament attributable to non-industrial purposes does not exceed 10 per cent. of the part thereof attributable to industrial purposes, the hereditament is to be treated as if it were occupied and used wholly for industrial purposes (Section 4 (2) (b)).

If the part of the net annual value attributable to non-industrial purposes exceeds 10 per cent. of the part thereof attributable to industrial purposes, 10 per cent. is to be added to the latter and deducted from the former (Section 4 (2) (b)). The value to be apportioned to non-industrial purposes is therefore the difference between the net annual value of the hereditament and the part of that value attributable to industrial purposes after 10 per cent. has been added to the latter.

Where Section 3 (3) of the Act has been applied and two or more hereditaments treated as forming parts of a single hereditament, it is necessary to apportion the value of the whole and to adopt the proportion so ascertained for the individual hereditaments (Section 4 (2) (c)).

The rateable value, as from 1st October 1929, of an industrial hereditament shown in a valuation list as being occupied and used wholly for industrial purposes is one-quarter of the net annual value thereof. In the case of such a hereditament shown as being occupied and used partly for industrial purposes, the rateable value is one-quarter of the net annual value shown in the list as apportioned to the occupation and user of the hereditament for industrial purposes, together with the whole of the net annual value so shown as apportioned to the occupation and user of the hereditament for other purposes (Local Government Act, 1929, Section 68).

(c) Freight-transport Hereditaments.

A freight-transport hereditament is a hereditament occupied and used wholly or partly for—

- (a) Railway transport purposes;
- (b) Canal transport purposes;
- (c) Dock purposes;

subject to the conditions laid down in the Act.

A hereditament primarily occupied and used as offices for, or for purposes ancillary to, the general direction and management of a railway, canal or dock undertaking shall not be deemed a freight-transport hereditament.

(A) Railway transport purposes.

The hereditament is a freight-transport hereditament if occupied and used wholly for railway transport purposes as part of—

- “ (i.) a railway undertaking carried on by a railway company, for which a schedule of standard charges has been settled under the Railways Act, 1921, or to which such a schedule is for the time being applied under section thirty-three of that Act, being an undertaking whereof the railway is used for the conveyance of merchandise otherwise than by passenger train or carriage; and
- (ii.) a light railway undertaking carried on by a light railway company, being an undertaking whereof the light railway is used as a public railway for the conveyance of merchandise otherwise than by passenger train or carriage.

‘Light railway’ includes a tramroad authorised by any special Act, but does not include any light railway laid wholly or mainly along a public carriageway and used wholly or mainly for the carriage of passengers.

‘Railway transport purposes’ means all purposes connected with the conveyance or transport by railway of passengers and their luggage, or of carriages, parcels or merchandise, including the construction, maintenance and repair of all ways, works, machinery and plant used in connection with the undertaking.”

(B) Canal transport purposes.

The hereditament is a freight-transport hereditament if occupied and used wholly or partly for canal transport purposes as part of a canal undertaking whereof the canal is used for the conveyance of merchandise.

“‘Canal undertaking’ includes any inland navigation undertaking comprising as part thereof an inland navigation used for the conveyance of merchandise, and ‘canal’ in relation to such an undertaking shall be construed as including an inland navigation.

‘Canal transport purposes’ means all purposes connected with the conveyance or transport by canal, or by a railway forming part of a canal undertaking, of passengers and their luggage, or of carriages, parcels or merchandise, including the construction, maintenance and repair of all ways, works, machinery and plant used in connection with the undertaking.”

(C) Dock purposes.

The hereditament is a freight-transport hereditament if occupied and used wholly or partly for dock purposes as part of a dock undertaking being an undertaking whereof a substantial proportion of the volume of business is concerned with the shipping and unshipping of merchandise not belonging to or intended for the use of the undertakers.

“‘Dock’ includes any harbour, wharf, pier, jetty or other works in or at which vessels can ship or unship merchandise or passengers not being a pier or jetty primarily used for recreation.

‘Dock undertaking’ means an undertaking carried on by a dock authority, but also includes any other undertaking comprising as part thereof a dock in so far only as its business is carried on at and in connection with that dock.

‘Vessel’ includes any ship or boat, or any other description of vessel used in navigation.

‘Dock purposes’ means all purposes connected with the shipping or unshipping at a dock of passengers and their luggage, or of carriages, parcels or merchandise, or the conveyance or transport thereof by a railway forming part of a dock undertaking, including the construction, maintenance and repair of all ways, works, machinery and plant used in connection with the undertaking, or connected with the provision of accommodation for vessels and their stores, equipment and tackle (including fishing tackle), whether for purposes of repair or otherwise."

APPORTIONMENT OF THE VALUE OF FREIGHT-TRANSPORT HEREDITAMENTS.

In every valuation list every freight-transport hereditament which is occupied and used wholly for transport purposes (including railway transport purposes, canal transport purposes and dock purposes) is to be shown as being so occupied and used. If occupied and used partly for transport purposes, the net annual value of the hereditament is to be apportioned between the occupation and user for transport purposes and for other purposes respectively.

The nature of the transport purpose is to be shown in the valuation list, and where a hereditament is used for more than one transport purpose a separate figure is to be apportioned to each such purpose.

For the purpose of the apportionment of the net annual value between transport purposes and other purposes respectively the following are to be deemed not to be occupied for transport purposes:—

Any part of the hereditament occupied and used for the purposes of a dwelling-house, hotel, or place of public refreshment.

Any part of the hereditament so let out as to be capable of separate assessment unless it is actually occupied and used for transport purposes.

In the case of a hereditament occupied and used for canal-transport purposes as part of a canal undertaking, or occupied and used for dock purposes as part of a dock undertaking, any part of the hereditament being a building, yard or other place primarily occupied and used for warehousing merchandise not in course of being transported.

A point which is difficult to decide is whether premises, such as coal, &c., depôts in railway goods-yards, are so let out as to be capable of separate assessment. The difficulty has been avoided in the preparation of special lists by an arrangement whereby premises within the railway curtilage and not having separate access have been treated as not being within this description.

The rateable value, as from 1st October, 1929, of a freight-transport hereditament shown in a valuation list as being occupied and used wholly for transport purposes is one-quarter of the net annual value thereof. In the case of such a hereditament shown as being occupied and used partly for transport purposes, the rateable value is one-quarter of the net annual value shown in the list as apportioned to the occupation and user of the hereditament for transport purposes, together with the whole of the net annual value so shown as apportioned to the occupation and user of the hereditament for other purposes (Local Government Act, 1929, Section 68).

Miscellaneous.

The other provisions of the Act are mainly in regard to administration, including the preparation of special lists, the application of the Act to Scotland, and the amendment of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1868. Conditions of space preclude the author from dealing with these matters in this Paper.

A DISCUSSION took place on

The Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928.

Mr. C. GERALD EVE (Vice-President) said it gave him considerable pleasure to propose a vote of thanks to his friend and colleague Mr. Milne. He, too, agreed that if one read the Act very carefully once or twice and got the general meaning of what Parliament intended, well and good; but if one bathed oneself in it, one would find there were so many answers to each problem that one could not see the wood for the trees. His sympathies were with the Treasury Solicitor and the head Revenue officers, because of the wide scope of the Act and the variety of the decisions given on it by Quarter Sessions. He did not blame the Quarter Sessions because the problems were so difficult, and the Government was no doubt anxious to try to get uniformity in the judgment of the Courts, but it could not very well do that except where questions of law arose. Questions of fact were decided for good and all at Quarter Sessions, but if a question of law could be formulated, the case could be taken to the High Court, and thus the Government would gradually tend to get the decisions codified into uniformity. The Act was, however, drawn so widely that it was almost impossible to expect that it would be interpreted in the same sense in all parts of the kingdom.

Mr. Milne dealt with the question of woodlands, as to whether woodlands were mainly or exclusively used for purposes of sport or recreation or whether they were not. Personally he would like to suggest a word of warning there. One Revenue officer said that if a wood were valued at its unimproved or prairie value at 1s. 6d., and the sport was worth 1s. 9d., the wood was not only used for woodland but was mainly used for sport. That, of course, was a wrong test to apply. The Act did not say that if the greater portion of the net annual value of the woods was sporting as compared with the unimproved or prairie value it had not to be de-rated; the Act talked about the use, and, of course, the use of a wood was for growing timber. The unimproved or prairie value at which it was assessed for rating was quite a different thing. The test was what it was mainly used for, and not what was the major element in the assessment, the prairie value or the sporting value.

That led to the burning question of sporting rights, and personally he had been certain since the Act of 1828 became effective that it could not be right in law to say that where sporting rights were not let by deed under seal they could be assessed separately; the value of the land had to be enhanced by the sporting rights. The Central Valuation Committee really attempted to alter the law by their recommendation and that had led many areas into sin and error, for they had attempted to assess the sporting separately when not let by deed under seal. There had been two cases before the High Court in connection with that matter, Swain v. Howells and, more recently, Towler v. The Thetford Rural District Council, the latter about a month ago. In each of those cases the High Court in effect held that unless sporting rights were let by deed under seal they could not be assessed separately, and he thought that was really the end of the matter.

The author went on to suggest that if those assessment areas and rating areas and their committees set themselves right about the sporting and struck out those separate assessments and put them with the land in the special list, then "unfortunately," as Mr. Milne said, the counties, and thus the areas within them, would lose the grant from the Exchequer. But if they put themselves in order before 1st October, 1930, then in his view the county would not lose anything, and they ought to be able to do it before that date, so that he did not think the risk the author mentioned was a real one. He might be wrong, but that was his reading of the situation.

Mr. Milne said that in support of the contention as to the separate assessment of sporting, though not let by deed under seal, there was sometimes quoted Section 67 of the Local Government Act, 1929, under which the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, was repealed. Mr. Milne had made a slip there. It was not Section 67 of the Local Government Act, 1929, which repealed the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896; it was Sections 134 and 137 when read together, and they did not repeal the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, until 1st October, 1930, a matter which was frequently forgotten or overlooked.

With regard to laundries, Mr. Milne quoted the case of

The Caledonian Railway Company v. Paterson (1898), where it was held that a hotel laundry was not a factory under the Factories Acts. Since that date, however, the Factory Act of 1901 had been passed which specifically brought in laundries, even including those carried on as ancillary to another business, so that that citation of the earlier case which occurred in 1898 had no meaning in view of the Factory Act of 1901.

He agreed with Mr. Milne where he spoke about the retail shop including a repair shop. Personally the only criticism he ventured to make of the Revenue officers was in regard to that. He ventured to think the Revenue officers had administered the Act in a most excellent way and had shown great tact and skill in administering the Act locally. His only criticism was that many had tried to argue that if any repairs went on in a large motor repair shop it was a retail shop. He could not agree, and he was glad to find Mr. Milne thought they had somewhat exceeded the limit in taking that view.

With regard to freight transport hereditaments, he would say only one thing. A dock was described in the Paper, and rightly so, as including any harbour, wharf—and he would stop there. A dock included a wharf. One might well ask what a wharf was. If one went down to the Thames-side one would find goods being unloaded on the quay, and within a few feet of the quay was a building; he called it a “building” so as to keep away from argument. Six feet away from the Thames water came the first building on the edge of the quay. Behind that were other buildings, and behind them others again, all used for exactly similar purposes. A barge came up, the goods were unloaded and might be carried in to the front, the centre, or the rear building, but there was no difference in the character of the user of any of those buildings. If that were so, one might well ask, “When is a wharf not a wharf?” Should the wharf stop at the first, the second, the third, or the fourth building? Personally he maintained, with respect, that it stopped where one proceeded to use any part of the premises differently from the way in which the front building was used.

If one went all round them in turn and put the bales which were unloaded in any of the buildings, he could not see why one should stop at the second, third, or fourth. Far more would be known about that in course of time when the matter came before the Courts.

There was only one other point on which he desired to touch. One might make a proposal against the old valuation list after 1st April, 1929, and also object to the special list, and the assessment committee might not yet have heard either case. When one attended, one was informed they were not hearing the proposal or the objections to the special list, or rather that they were not hearing both of them but only one of the two. The Ministry had answered questions in the same form of words to many assessment committees and rating authorities to the following effect: The assessment committee or rating authority wrote up and said "We have a case here where So-and-So has made a proposal against this industrial hereditament, and he has also objected to the special list," and the Ministry wrote to say "We think it was quite unnecessary for him to have made a proposal to the ordinary list," and where the ratepayer had only objected or proposed against the ordinary list and had not objected to the special list, the Ministry went so far as to say the ratepayer had taken a wrong remedy. With great respect he entirely disagreed with that. One had both barrels that one could fire off at choice; one could propose against the ordinary list and one could object to the special list, and, except in the case of an agricultural hereditament, one was entitled, in his view, to be heard on both. He thought the Ministry, with great respect, were wrong in suggesting that one could not fire off both barrels.

He would like to conclude by saying again with what great pleasure he proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Milne. He thought Mr. Milne's Paper was excellent, and he had no real criticisms to pass upon it.

Mr. A. B. D. LANG (Fellow), in seconding the vote of thanks, said that there were two things on which he found himself in disagreement with Mr. Milne. In the case of the bakehouse, he had seemed to suggest that with a building of, say, four floors—the ground floor, basement, and two others—having a bakehouse on the ground floor and basement, and living rooms upstairs, if the bakehouse was separately assessed it could be treated as a separate hereditament, and part of the building could be treated as a wholly industrial and the other part as residential property. He did not know if that correctly represented Mr. Milne's view, but if it did he disagreed with him. He looked at it in a different way, and he had so advised the Corporation of the City of London, for whom he had been acting. As a matter of fact there had been a good many cases on that very point, and none of them had yet been upset by Quarter Sessions—not that that meant very much, because Quarter Sessions decisions not infrequently differed on similar cases. His own view, however, was this: In the case of any building, one had to decide what was the primary use and occupation of that building as a whole. If the primary use and occupation of that building was to make bread and buns and sell them, then in his opinion the building was primarily industrial. If, on the other hand, the primary use and occupation of that building was a retail shop selling over the counter a very large proportion of the bread that was baked in the bakehouse, and the proprietor merely lived upstairs, in his opinion it had to be looked at from a different point of view altogether, and in his view in most of those cases the primary use was that of a retail shop. He emphasised that he was giving merely his own view, because he recognised that there was a wide diversity of opinion on the point.

Then there was the question of the Factory and Workshop Act. In using that test it had to be remembered that although a building which was registered under the Factory and Workshop Act might be, by the very fact of its being so registered, a factory or workshop, nevertheless there were many buildings which were not registered as factories or workshops, but which were industrial hereditaments and came under the Act. In the City of London he was prepared to say that two out of every five industrial hereditaments were not registered under the Factory and Workshop Act at all. As a matter of fact in the beginning the Revenue officers did rather tend to take that as a primary test and to rule out any property which was not registered, but it was his experience that they had now dropped that contention.

The question of contiguity, on which Mr. Milne had touched, was one which presented many difficulties. It was impossible to lay down any sort of rule about it; in fact, like most of the rest of the Act, it seemed that every case had to be treated on its merits in a common-sense way. There had been cases where it had been argued and held that two buildings occupied by the same firm on opposite sides of the road were contiguous, and, on the other hand, it had been argued that contiguous meant touching. Personally he thought the meaning of Parliament was quite clear, namely, that where they were so near as to be in the popular sense of the term contiguous they were meant to be protected by the Act; but he was afraid that if the legal test were ever applied—he was not speaking of Quarter Sessions, which decided on fact and not on questions of law—the Courts would decide against that interpretation.

It was with the greatest pleasure that he seconded the vote of thanks.

Mr. SYDNEY A. SMITH (Fellow) said that when industrial de-rating was first spoken of it was meant to be applied to productive industry. He could well conceive that the difficulty of defining productive industry was so great that the draughtsman was very glad to turn over to the code of the Factory and Workshop Act, but that code had brought de-rating to many classes of property which few imagined at first were to be given the benefit of it. It came as a surprise to find the luxury trades, laundries and breweries were to get the benefit, though, as regards the breweries, the benefit they got would, he believed, be taken away by subsequent taxation.

The recent extension in the 1929 Act of the Factory Act definition to the one-man factory had brought, in his experience, some very unexpected claims. He had seen claims from artists in respect of their studios. There seemed to be a case for the sculptor engaged in carvings for the adornment of war memorials and stone and marble friezes for the decoration of buildings. His as a one-man factory, when examined, appeared to comply with the requirements of the Factory Act. He did not at present see how the exclusions in Section 3 would take that particular hereditament out of the list, and if Mr. Milne had any experience of a similar nature he would be very glad to hear of it.

Section 3 provided a code for deciding whether premises were primarily industrial or not, and Section 4 prescribed rules under which the apportionment of the value was to be made. The two were distinct. He had heard it said, with regard to Section 3, that the comparative value of the respective parts was not one of the important considerations to be taken into account. Section 4, of course, dealt entirely with value; but where he had met difficulty in practice in various parts of the country had been in connection with portions of industrial hereditaments which were used for wholesale distributive purposes. After the property had got on to the list, and when the division of the value was being made, there was something so arresting about the words "wholesale distributive" in Section 3 that many people seemed to think that the wholesale distributive portion in an industrial hereditament was a portion which must be treated necessarily as non-industrial under Section 4. But Section 4 did not mention "wholesale distribution." His own view was that portions of industrial premises used for wholesale distributive purposes might quite likely themselves be factory purposes. If not solely used for distributive purposes they would rank as apportionable on the industrial side. Mr. Milne rightly said that the interpretation of the words "wholesale distributive business" had given rise to a good deal of difficulty. In a recent case, Orlinsky and Kleinmann v. Revenue Officer, a Stepney case, the counsel acting for the Revenue officer advanced an argument that premises having four upper floors admitted to be a factory, and the ground floor used for the storage of the finished articles, and also for the distribution of the finished articles, the main purpose of the building was to supply the distributive portion of it.

He thought there was a practical point for everyone in London in connection with the 1930 quinquennial valuation. There were many assessments to-day where the non-industrial and industrial hereditaments were lumped in one figure, and where owing to the influence of the non-industrial part they were to-day denied the benefits of de-rating. When the quinquennial assessment came it would be an opportunity, where those parts were capable of separate assessment, to secure their separate assessment with a view to getting the benefit of de-rating on the industrial part. The same practical point would arise in the converse case where a property had two assessments at the present time, one on the industrial portion and one on the non-industrial portion. In some cases they might properly be assessed as one, and then the benefit of the 10 per cent. on the industrial portion would carry over to the non-industrial portion to the benefit of the ratepayer. He had a case before him only that day of a factory which was assessed at £800 and given full de-rating benefit, which meant a rateable value of £200, and within the same fence the offices were separately assessed at £60 and treated as non-industrial, so that to-day there was a rateable value of £260. If there was no change in value and those two were put together, there would be a new assessment of £860 and a rateable value of £215, which showed the obvious benefit of joining the two.

Mr. A. GILCHRIST (Visitor), of the Treasury Solicitor's Office, said that an assessment committee was now acting under the 1928 Act purely as a judicial body. If the rating authority and the Revenue officer agreed to include a hereditament as an industrial hereditament, or if, with the consent of the occupier, they excluded it, then the assessment committee "shall not have power to alter those particulars." He did not think that was generally appreciated by assessment committees throughout the country; they still largely acted as if they were executive bodies and had executive powers, and forgot that the rating authorities when acting under the 1928 Act had executive powers, and that the assessment committees were what they in fact called themselves in Scotland, namely, assessment appeal courts—courts of first instance.

He would like to have heard a little of the method under which any separate assessment which might be desired could be obtained. The last speaker mentioned a case where a works and office were assessed already as two hereditaments, and he wanted to have them assessed as one. He did not see what advantage would be gained from that, because in order to be assessed as one hereditament they would have to be contiguous or within the same curtilage.

Another point was that all the previous procedure had been for the benefit of the ratepayer, and formulated to prevent the harsh rating authority or assessment committee assessing him in more than one assessment, because it was true in rating that the parts were greater than the whole. Under the 1928 Act, however, the ratepayer sees that the parts will be much less than the whole, and that made the difficulty in finding out what could be separately assessed, because now the matter was being looked at from the point of view of the ratepayer who was asking to have his holding split up into separate assessments, whereas in the past he was trying to be protected from that.

Again, on the question of separate assessment, he was glad to see the Scotch took a common-sense view. That problem did not worry them at all because they had a doctrine, the doctrine of unum quid, and they said "It does not matter what the assessment people have done; this is a unum quid, and we will treat it as such." He wished, from his point of view, that that doctrine was current in England.

Coming to Section 3, the words which were so important but often forgotten were "primarily" and "or any combination of such purposes." Then, again, there were the words "the purposes of." What had to be looked at was the primary object for which the premises were being used. Again, before one came to deal with the exceptions, one had to say it was either primarily occupied or used for one of those exceptions or for any combination of them. He had heard many Quarter Sessions say "Yes, 30 per cent. of it is used for factory purposes, and only 15 per cent. for the purposes of a dwelling-house, so that that puts out the dwelling-house, and only 15 per cent. for a retail shop, so that that puts out the retail shop," and so they went on, and by marshalling their one army against the rest individually they defeated the object, and would not let the Revenue officer's army assemble and be treated as a combination.

With regard to the words "for the purposes of," the consideration here was not whether the premises were primarily used for distributive wholesale business, but whether they were used for the purposes of distributive wholesale business, which, he suggested, was vastly different. Those words "for the purposes of" connoted something in the minds not only of the draughtsmen but of everybody dealing with the Act. A thing to remember was that there were certain things which were the last processes of manufacture, and there were certain other things which were the first processes of distribution.

Whether or not premises were registered as a factory or a workshop was not final evidence, but he did suggest that in the case of premises not so registered the onus of proof was certainly shifted completely to the occupier to show not only that he had a factory or workshop, but also that it was not primarily occupied or used for one of the exceptions. If one came across premises that were registered as a factory or workshop, the onus of proof, if there was any—if it was challenged—would be on the Revenue officer or the rating authority to show that it was not in truth and fact a factory or workshop. The effect of non-registry, in his opinion, was to shift the onus of proof.

On the question of proviso (f), he would like to read a few words used by Lord Hunter and Lord Sands in the case of The Assessor of the Burgh of Paisley with reference to the Paisley refuse destructor. Lord Hunter said:—

"Assuming the appellant is right in that contention, he has still to face the circumstance that by the statute by Section 3 (1) (f), in the case even of a factory or workshop, the premises are not entitled to be de-rated if they are primarily used for any other purpose . . . that seems to indicate that you cannot really determine everything by finding out whether premises are a factory or workshop, and that some meaning must be attached to that provision. I think the intention must be that, when you look to that exception, you must regard the purpose for which the premises are used, and if you see in a reasonable and common-sense view that no one would think of describing that purpose as a factory and workshop purpose, the claim to de-rating falls to be disallowed . . . I think it would be almost fantastic to say that, where the object in view is to render the streets of a town more or less sanitary and clean and the refuse that is collected is destroyed, the apparatus by which that refuse is destroyed and the premises where the destruction takes place are to be looked upon as industrial."

Lord Sands concurred in that. There one had a case of premises every inch of which was registered and must be registered as a factory or workshop.

Again, as to distributive wholesale business, he agreed that that was a difficult exception, but it was rendered more difficult than it need be because everyone started reading that exception by deleting the words "for the purposes of." In the case of Revenue Officer v. John Donaldson and Company (Seed Merchants, Leith), Lord Hunter said:—

"The occupiers of the premises do not manufacture or grow seeds for purposes of sale. Nor do they carry on the business of cleaning seeds. What they do is they buy large quantities of seed in order to sell to retail dealers, who, in turn, sell to the customer who desires the seeds for his own consumption. On the face of it, and on the statement that is given to us by the Committee, I think the business carried on here is essentially that of a distributive wholesale business, and that what is done on the premises here in the way of cleaning the seeds is done in connection with that business and not as an independent business at all."

He thought those last words were important in considering (f) "and not as an independent business at all."

In the Johnny Walker whisky blending case, the Scots people would not at any price admit the contention that this was an industrial process; they said it did not change the nature of the whisky but only made it more palatable.

With regard to the word "contiguous," he thought the learned Solicitor-General was not quite accurately reported. He never intended to say that "contiguous" meant anything else than touching. Admitting that premises on the opposite side of the street were contiguous did not interfere with that interpretation, because it had to be remembered that the frontager presumably owned up to the middle of the thoroughfare in front of him, and the frontager on the opposite side also owned up to the middle of the thoroughfare, so that those two hereditaments which included not only the building but the sub-soil of half the street were therefore touching. That was the interpretation that the Revenue officer put on contiguous—that they must be touching. Where premises were on the side of a canal, and it was shown that the canal company had bought the whole of the soil, it was held by some assessment committees that the premises were not touching and were therefore not contiguous. The Chairman of the London Quarter Sessions, when deciding the case of Hoe, which was quoted in the paper in that connection, said "contiguous" was an unfortunate word, but happily it had not been necessary to consider it because the premises in that case were used as part of one factory. Personally he would like to make it clear that the Solicitor-General held that contiguous meant touching, and there were no decisions to upset that. A rather nice problem was coming before the London Quarter Sessions in a day or two, where the premises were all round a square, but which premises were contiguous to the others, and which opposite people were contiguous he did not know.

He thought the sufferance wharves of London, referred to recently by Mr. Eve, would be having a field day shortly, because 19 cases with regard to them were pending, so that in the near future a great deal more would be known about freight transport hereditaments.

Mr. Lang was unkind to Quarter Sessions when he said they did not deal with questions of law. One could not appeal from Quarter Sessions on questions of fact, but only on questions of law. It might be of interest to mention that under Bains' Act, or the similar provisions of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, test cases were being taken to the High Court by arrangement with trade organisations in connection with seed merchants (cleaning, sifting, and sorting), bakers' shops (dwelling-house, shop, and bakery), milk (bottling, pasteurising, sterilising, homogenising), oil-blending, beer-bottling (carbonating and aerating), cold-storage cleaners, and dyers (despatch and receiving shops away from factory), sporting rights—and so far as sporting rights were concerned he did not want to damp Mr. Gerald Eve's ardour, but he had an answer to the case though not to the question which he put—railway repair depôts and lock-keepers' cottages. Appeals were being taken from the Quarter Sessions in nearly every other kind of case, and there were 91 of them, but it was hoped that it would not be necessary to go on with the actions. Under the existing law it appeared to be necessary for the loser to ask for a special case to be taken so as to keep his own case alive. It was very gratifying to find that in the majority of cases assessment committees, directly they were informed that a case was going to the High Court, had wisely held up decisions in similar cases.

It was very gratifying to him to hear Mr. Gerald Eve speak of the good work done by the Revenue officers. The present was the second occasion on which he had fallen among surveyors, the first being when buying land for arterial roads. He would like to testify to the help he had received from, and what a pleasure it had been to him to work with, the Revenue officers all over England and Wales, and he would like to express publicly his gratitude to them.

The Revenue officer had been the appellant in 934 cases and the respondent in 237; those were the figures up to 4th February last.

Out of the cases heard at Quarter Sessions the Revenue officer had lost 150 and won 343, and 424 cases were respited. If one added the 91 cases which were going to the High Court that made up the total. It was rather interesting to note that with two exceptions, which he would mention, all the appeals had been with reference to classification the only appeals with reference to value had been in respect of mines and works in South Wales, and with respect to apportionment sufferance wharves. With respect to the latter it was no longer a wharf when it was situated more than 500 yards from the Thames, and then it was impossible under the Sufferance Wharf Acts to charge sufferance wharf charges to the people who warehoused with them.

There was one point in regard to which any assistance The Institution might render would be very valuable, namely, with regard to banking charges or wayleaves in mining, i.e., charges for bringing to bank coal won in another rating area. In South Wales there was no recognised system in that respect; it varied from 42 to 12 per cent., and made it difficult to agree an assessment in one parish with one rating authority when the next rating area might be going to charge a different price such as 2*d.* or 2½*d.* to bank, whereas the particular rating authority with whom one was dealing was charging only 1*d.*, and said "We shall let you deal with us only on the assumption that other people charge the same." If The Institution could get the Central Valuation Committee to do something or make some move towards getting uniformity in the calculation of the banking charge he thought it would be very useful.

Another point concerned the county valuation committees. It was time, he thought, in most cases for them to take a larger view, or, rather, to do more to co-ordinate the work of the assessment committees and the rating authorities in their area.

The special list would produce, he thought, greater uniformity in England and Wales than there had ever been, so that it seemed very possible the result of the Act of 1928 would be that at the end of the second or third quinquennial the very vexed question of equalitative rating would have solved itself.

He thought the writer of the Paper was to be heartily congratulated upon it, and also on the opinions he had formed. He was sorry that personally he could not agree with all of them, but there were not many points of disagreement between himself and Mr. Milne.

Mr. JOHN A. F. WATSON (Professional Associate Member of Council) said Mr. Gerald Eve had already expressed the opinion that the Act was well drafted, and Mr. Lang that it was badly drafted, but there seemed general agreement that it was difficult to understand. It was difficult also to keep touch with the decisions of Quarter Sessions on the various points which arose; almost as difficult as to keep in touch with the fluctuations of certain speculative stocks; they moved so quickly.

The first question he wished to ask was as follows: When the Local Government Act was passed, according to Section 73, in the case of premises let at an inclusive rent and wholly de-rated, the landlord had to pass on to his tenant that proportion of the rates in respect of which relief had been given. Then the question arose of how much the landlord should hand on. The position as he understood it was that if one had a single property assessed as a whole, part of which was sub-let, and relief was given in respect of the whole assessment, the landlord had to hand some of that on to his tenant; and the tenant under Section 73 of the Local Government Act had to apply to the rating authority, who would give a certificate (which would be final) as to how much he was to get in respect of that de-rating from his landlord. He had a case the other day where his client occupied a five or six-storey building and let the top floor, or the top two floors, to a sub-tenant. Both the occupier of the majority of the building and his sub-tenant carried on business which was purely industrial. The building was assessed as a whole, and he would take it that the landlord got total relief and paid on an assessment of £30 a year rateable value, whereas the deduction from net annual value to rateable value was £90. The tenant went to the rating authority and got a certificate granting to him £11 per annum to be passed to him by the landlord; in other words, rates at 10s. in the £ on an apportioned sum of £22. The landlord said "That is all very well; they tell me I have to hand on a quarter of the benefit given me for the whole building, but my contention is that the man upstairs occupies only one-sixth." That proved to be correct. The landlord said "What am I to do? I do not want to hand him a quarter." He approached the authority, and they quoted the Local Government Act under which it would appear that their certificate was final and not variable. He would like to know what happened in such a case, because it seemed that nothing could be done beyond waiting till the next quinquennial valuation and getting a separate assessment. If there was no separate assessment, the landlord was going to be harshly treated.

His other question had regard to a particular kind of property, namely, dairies where pasteurisation was carried on. A lot had been heard about butter-making, which included pasteurisation to a small extent, but there were considerable differences of opinion between Quarter Sessions on the point, and he would like to know the latest quotation, as it were, and what was the case Mr. Gilchrist had referred to as about to be tried in the High Court.

Mr. C. HARMAN HUNT (Professional Associate) asked whether, if before an assessment committee—he did not say the Quarter Sessions or the High Court—one got over the difficulty of crossing a road and got down the street a little way, it was necessary to examine the user of that separated portion or to look at the whole hereditament. The particular case he was thinking of was a saw-mill, and the storage of the raw material for that saw-mill was some distance away. His contention was that if the storage of the raw material had been adjoining the saw-mill it would be storage of material for alteration and sale, and it would have been included in the industrial hereditament. There was no storage for wholesale distributive purposes. If one managed to get down the road a little and bring in the storage yard in question and claim that it was contiguous, he contended it should be de-rated because it was storage of raw material. The Revenue officer argued that was not so, and that it was just a storage of material for wholesale distribution and not eligible for the special list. Personally he thought that was rather arbitrary, because in a similar case, in the same borough, yards where timber was stored for use later in a factory had been de-rated.

There was another point on which, perhaps, Mr. Milne might give his view. When rating valuers were valuing industrial hereditaments at the next quinquennial valuation and came to examine the rents, they would find that the rents were higher, and that some part of the increase was due to the fact that the premises had been de-rated. One had to divide up in one's mind, as he saw it, how much of that increased rent was due to the relief from rates. It seemed to him a knotty problem, and if one was not careful one would find occupiers of industrial hereditaments losing the benefit of the Act.

Mr. C. BERTRAM ROLFE (Professional Associate) wished to make one suggestion. Mr. Milne referred to Section 149 of the Sixth Schedule of the Factory and Workshop Act, and said that was to be found on page 141 of Volume VIII. of the Journal. He would like to suggest that those pages be reprinted for reference purposes with the report of the present discussion.

Mr. E. WITTON BOOTH (Fellow) said that those who were engaged in the work entailed by the 1925 Act strenuously sought to get the uniformity which was one of the principal objects of that Act; but anyone who went through the various decisions in the border-line cases under the 1928 Act and considered the various facts could only conclude that there was, at present, a certain amount of departure from that uniformity. That being so, he was pleased to hear Mr. Gilchrist say that the result of the 1928 Act would be that after a few quinquennial valuations greater uniformity would be obtained. It was not easy to see how that was going to be attained, and in any event it would be a very difficult thing to bring about, as it would mean codifying such a wide and varying range of facts.

There was one other small but important point, and that was whether de-rating had come to stay. It was important because the de-rating of industrial premises did not in any way decrease the importance of getting a proper valuation under the 1925 Act or under the London Acts. Naturally, when a ratepayer was going to pay only on 25 per cent. of the assessed value, he was not so keen on contesting the valuation, but at the same time it was essential to remember that the original assessment had lost none of its importance, and that the De-rating Act did not affect in any way the desirability of getting a correct assessment from which to commence deductions.

The PRESIDENT then put the vote of thanks to the meeting, which was carried with acclamation.

Mr. JAMES L. MILNE, in reply, said the honour of being asked to prepare and read a Paper for one's fellow-members of The Institution was in itself a sufficient recompense for any trouble incurred in preparing it, but he was exceedingly grateful to Mr. Gerald Eve and Mr. Lang for the way in which they proposed and seconded the vote of thanks, and to the meeting generally for the way in which their proposal had been received.

He found himself of the opposite opinion to Mr. Gerald Eve in regard to validity of notices. Under paragraph 1 (4) of Part 2 of the Ninth Schedule of the Local Government Act, 1929, it was to his mind perfectly clear that the only way to get a reduction of the net annual value of a property for the last half-year—the half-year ending 30th September—if the property was in the special list, was to lodge a notice of objection to the special list, and if, at the time of the approval by the assessment committee of the special list, there was outstanding an objection to the draft valuation list, or a proposal lodged during the currency of the half-year in question, then that objection or proposal was ineffective and could not be effectively determined by the assessment committee. There were numbers of cases where people had failed to lodge notice of objection to special lists, and he knew of others where the assessment committee had determined proposals, sometimes deferring the hearing of objections to special lists and sometimes in the absence of any objections to special lists. He thought those decisions were ineffective. He knew of cases where assessment committees had determined proposals where the properties were in the special list and where people were going to Quarter Sessions against those decisions. In his opinion the decisions of the assessment committees on those proposals were void and could not be the subject of a proper appeal.

If his view was right he was afraid the consequences would be rather serious for a great many people who had not been lucky enough to find Part 2 of the Ninth Schedule of the Local Government Act. He thought they would be entitled to protest against important provisions of the kind in question being put in a schedule along with provisions about settlement, and irremovability of paupers, and things like that, without anything in the Act itself to direct their attention to those provisions. It was by the merest chance that he found that part of the schedule. In consequence he had given notice of objection to the special list in every one of his cases where there was an outstanding proposal.

With regard to the sporting rights point, Swain v. Howells and Towler v. The Thetford Rural District Council were not quite on the same point as that mentioned in his Paper; they referred only to the question of the legality of a separate assessment on severed sporting rights in the absence of a letting of those rights under seal. Such assessments were often made in respect of sporting rights over an area of land which comprised a number of separately tenanted farms. The point at issue in the test case which was going to the High Court was not quite the same ; it was whether, when there was an assessment on a farm with reserved unlet sporting rights, the sporting rights value in regard to that particular farm should be included with the value of the land or should be put in another column, and whether, of course, they should be with the land and be de-rated or charged full rates.

Mr. Lang had raised a point about bakehouses. In London, of course, the position was rather different as regards rating law and practice from what it was in the provinces. In places where land was not of high value, it was often found that a bakehouse had been erected apart from the main building ; where one found a bakers' shop with a bakehouse at the end of the back garden, it might be that the bakehouse was capable of separate occupation, and the rating authority or assessment committee would be quite entitled, if they liked, to place a separate assessment on it, and that had been done in a number of cases. He did not think that generally assessment committees had acted unfairly in the matter. The important point to notice was that one had only to look at the primary use of the whole building if it was all in one assessment ; one had to look at the primary use of the hereditament as assessed.

As to registration of factories, non-registration might, of course, be evidence that a property was not registerable as a factory, and if property was not registerable as a factory or workshop it could not be a factory or workshop for de-rating purposes.

He thought the 1928 Act would have some effect in promoting the uniformity which all rating surveyors desired, by reason of the fact that there would be so many fewer properties in valuation lists. Agricultural land and agricultural buildings would disappear, the preparation of future valuation lists would be simplified, and more time would doubtless be devoted to the promotion of uniformity.

In regard to the whisky case, he did not quite agree with Mr. Gilchrist that the Scots people would not have the de-rating of whisky establishments at any price. Lord Sands said that whisky must be blended before it was sold ; but he went on to say: "It appears to me this simple and necessary process when it results in nothing that is distinctive cannot be regarded as other than an incident in the process of distribution." He called it an "incident in the process of distribution," and he thought one could see from that what was in his Lordship's mind. He ended by saying "I concur, therefore, though not without difficulty, in the judgment proposed in this case." That indicated in the Johnny Walker case that Lord Sands was not quite convinced that de-rating should be refused.

Mr. Watson raised a point with regard to Section 73 of the Local Government Act. He thought Mr. Watson could rest assured that the decision given by the rating authority was not final; if he would look at Section 73, Sub-section (2), he would see that the certificate of the rating authority had to be in respect of any rate or instalment of a rate, and therefore, although it might be final for the first rate, he would have an opportunity between now and the next rate of showing the rating authority the error of their ways, and doubtless, with his persuasive powers, would influence them to alter the basis of their certificate.

Mr. Harman Hunt raised the point of a storage yard for a saw-mill, and whether that could be treated as contiguous so as to be treated with the saw-mill as one hereditament. The point there was not only contiguity but whether it and the saw-mill formed part of a single factory within the meaning of the Factory and Workshop Act, and that, of course, depended on the circumstances of the case.

The meeting then terminated.

RECENT DEVELOPMENTS IN THE ELECTRICITY SUPPLY OF GREAT BRITAIN, with Special Reference to Rural Electrification.

By Sir Harry Haward

(Vice-Chairman of the Electricity Commission).

To be read at the Meeting of The Surveyors' Institution on Monday, 10th March, 1930.

The Legislation of 1919—1926.

The past decade has witnessed most important developments in the electricity supply of this country. Three Acts of Parliament have been passed (1919, 1922, and 1926) providing for the reorganisation of the Supply Industry. One of the earliest lessons learnt during the Great War was the necessity for the conservation of the national resources, and certain committees were set up by the Board of Trade to report on the question of coal conservation and power supply development. In particular, the Committee presided over by Sir Archibald Williamson (now Lord Forres) was instructed to report "what steps should be taken, whether by legislation or otherwise, to ensure that there shall be an adequate and economical supply of electric power for all classes of consumers in the United Kingdom, particularly industries which depend upon a cheap supply of power for their development." This Committee unanimously arrived at the following conclusions:—

- "(3) That the present system under which a supply of electricity is provided in a large number of small areas by separate authorities is the result of a policy adopted at a time when the applied science of electrical engineering was in its infancy, and is incompatible with anything that can now be accepted as a technically sound system;
- (4) That the interconnection of existing electrical supply stations, recommended by the Board of Trade in their letter of the 25th May, 1916, however desirable in itself, cannot alone meet the requirements of the situation;

- (5) That a comprehensive system for the generation of electricity and, where necessary, reorganising its supply should be established as soon as possible."

The general idea was to divide up the country into large electricity districts and to set up an authority in each district to reorganise the supply.

The chief recommendations of the Committee were embodied in the Electricity Supply Bill, 1919, which, however, was greatly modified by the House of Lords by the omission of the powers of the proposed district authorities to acquire generating stations, compulsorily if necessary, and of the financial provisions.

The Electricity (Supply) Act, 1919, which was hailed—perhaps somewhat optimistically—as the "Charter of the "Electricity Supply Industry," certainly ranks in importance with the initial legislation of 1882-8, and was designed to break down the parochial or small-packet system of supply which had grown up under that legislation. It provided for the setting up of a body called "the Electricity Commissioners" for "promoting, regulating and supervising" the supply of electricity in the country. Broadly speaking, the Commissioners exercise, under the general direction of the Minister of Transport, the powers formerly exercised by the Board of Trade and certain other Government departments, and were entrusted with new powers of control over the establishment or extension of generating stations and main transmission lines. A special function entrusted to them was that of approving or formulating schemes for improving the existing organisation for the supply of electricity in suitable electricity districts, including the setting up of joint electricity authorities. The main provisions of the Act were directed to the primary problem of generation, and aimed at securing the concentration of generation in a limited number of interconnected stations to be worked under a unified control.

It was the intention that these schemes should proceed upon the basis of voluntary co-operation between the various authorised undertakers and other bodies affected in a district, but it soon became evident that the necessary co-operation among the principal supply authorities was not forthcoming, and the policy of suasion proved a failure. In the result only four joint electricity authorities (one not exercising executive functions) and four advisory bodies were formed. The following extract from the Seventh Annual Report of the Commissioners indicates the difficulties confronting the Commissioners under the 1919 Act:—

“It is necessary to remember that the problem of reorganisation presented by the Act of 1919 was not one of initiating a completely new development on the basis of accumulated technical experience, but resolved itself into the question of adapting and co-ordinating the expansion of an existing industry with the view of securing the maximum economies and most efficient service in providing for the growing electrical requirements of the country as a whole. The process of reorganisation was inevitably affected by the circumstances which prevailed at the outset, the salient features of which were the heterogeneous character of the then existing development, the multiplicity of interests concerned, and a deep-rooted disposition on the part of authorised undertakers in general to regard electricity supply from an individualistic and local standpoint only.”

The slow progress made in the work of reorganisation led to the setting up of Lord Weir's Committee in 1925, to “review the national problem of the supply of electric energy and report on the broad lines of policy to ensure its most efficient and effective development.” The recommendations of this Committee formed the basis of the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1926, the object and main provisions of which may be briefly summarised as follows:—

“The Act of 1926 provides an obligatory basis for the co-ordination of generation through the instrumentality of a new public body, the Central Electricity

Board, established as an authorised undertaker for the whole of Great Britain. The Act does not contemplate (except as a last resource) the transfer of any generating stations to or the construction and operation of stations by the Central Board itself, but provides for the co-ordination of generation on a comprehensive basis by vesting the Board with power to control and purchase the output of stations operated on its behalf by the owners thereof, and by placing the necessary obligations on the owners. In effect, the Board is constituted the central supply authority from whom authorised undertakers in general will obtain their supplies in bulk, either directly or indirectly, the distribution and commercial development of electricity being left in the hands of such undertakers as heretofore.

With these ends in view, the Act makes provision for the preparation by the Commissioners, and for the adoption and carrying out by the Central Board, of schemes which will (a) determine what generating stations (whether existing or new) are to be 'selected' stations at which electricity is to be generated for the purposes of the Board; (b) provide for the interconnection, by means of main transmission lines to be constructed or acquired by the Board, of selected stations with one another and with the systems of authorised undertakers; (c) provide for such standardisation of frequency as is essential to the carrying out of such interconnection; and (d) enable or require temporary arrangements for certain purposes to be made between the Board and the owners of generating stations during the carrying out of the works specified in the scheme."—(Seventh Annual Report of the Electricity Commissioners, page 5.)

The Central Electricity Board was duly appointed by the Minister of Transport in January, 1927. It is composed of seven members, with a chairman, chosen as men of affairs with wide business experience and judgment. Its functions are executive and clearly distinguished from those of the Electricity Commissioners, which are administrative, technical and controlling, but not executive. The Board does not work for profit, and it must sell all the energy it controls at cost price with a margin.

The Progress of the Supply Industry.

Despite the difficulties and uncertainties involved in the work of reorganisation, the industry has made rapid progress during the period under review. In 1920 there were 532 separate authorised undertakers, and at 31st March last 659. The amount of plant installed in generating stations was approximately 2,309,000 k.w. in 1920, and at the end of 1927-28 it was 5,258,257 k.w.

The number of units generated in 1921-22 by all authorised undertakers and railway and tramway authorities, including a few non-statutory undertakings but excluding generation by private plants, was 4,884,666,038; in 1928-29 it had risen to 10,878,980,925, or an increase in 7 years of over 120 per cent. The sales to consumers were, of course, less, and the latest figure relating to the calendar year 1928 and for authorised undertakers only was 7,603,000,000 units, representing an average consumption of 171 units per head of population supplied from the public mains, or probably 340 units including the output from private plants. The capital invested in the Supply Industry in 1921-22 was £143,716,000, and it had grown to £269,002,000 by the end of 1927-28. There is no difficulty in obtaining the large amount of capital required for electrical developments in this country and recently American capital has secured a substantial participation in some of our supply undertakings.

The average revenue from electricity sold to consumers throughout the country in 1921-22 was 2·48*d.* per unit, which had been reduced by 1927-28 to 1·55*d.*, or by 36 per cent. This is an average figure for all classes of supply, i.e., lighting and domestic purposes, public lighting, traction, and power.

Progress has been made in other directions; the problem of the standardisation of frequency has been tackled and settled by the grid schemes, and the number of different voltages and pressures, so puzzling and inconvenient to the public, has been reduced as the result of the Commissioners' endeavours to bring some sort of order out of chaos, but their powers of effective action in this respect are very limited. Some advance has been made towards a more rational system of distribution on the lines recommended in the Weir Report by the granting of powers of distribution over wide areas of supply.

The progress made during the past decade is, however, no measure of the advance which may confidently be expected in the future as the National Grid Scheme is progressively brought into operation and the widespread developments in distribution authorised during the last few years materialise. The estimates of future growth contained in Lord Weir's Report have not been seriously challenged. They foreshadow that in or about 1940 the consumption of electricity from the public supply systems will have reached 500 units per head of population (1921 census) or 21,385,000,000 units, and that the k.w. of plant installed will be 10,000,000 concentrated in 28 main stations and 30 secondary stations, and the average price per unit 1*d.* or under. They further estimated that during the period to 1940 new money to the extent of upwards of £250,000,000 would be required, one-half of which would be for distribution, and the other half for generation and the transmission network outlined in the technical scheme. Hence the importance of expending this vast sum in the manner best calculated to secure a comprehensive development.

The National Grid System.

In pursuance of their statutory duty under the Act of 1926, the Commissioners have prepared and transmitted to the Central Electricity Board 7 regional schemes for the construction and working of the national grid and the standardisation of frequency in generation at 50 cycles per second. Each of these schemes has been accompanied by elaborately worked out tables illustrating the manner in which the scheme should be worked on the basis of the data at present available. These schemes cover the whole of England and Wales, except East Anglia (for which a scheme is in course of preparation), and the industrial belt of Scotland. The work of the Commissioners in producing schemes has therefore been well-nigh accomplished.

The total number of selected stations shown by these schemes is 110, the main factors in their selection being the cost of coal and facilities for coal storage, the availability of water for condensing purposes, the technical characteristics of the station, its proximity to load, and possibilities for further extension. In addition, about 50 other stations are scheduled in the schemes to be used under temporary arrangements for a period of years, but it is contemplated that the latter will in due course be shut down, and that the whole of the energy required by the country will be concentrated in about 100 stations as compared with about 500 stations now in operation.

The seven schemes provide for the construction of about 2,500 route miles of h.t. transmission lines at 132,000 volts. This mileage will probably be increased by the remaining schemes to, say, 3,000 miles. The transforming stations associated with the 132,000 volt grid number 119, and from these will radiate secondary networks consisting of overhead lines mostly of 33,000 volts, partly constructed by the Board and partly by authorised undertakers. The grid will, to use the expression of the Weir Committee, be a "very useful backbone" to the transmission system.

To the lay mind the working of the scheme presents the following picture: The merging of the generating resources of a district provides a vast regional pool of electrical energy fed from the selected stations operating under a plan of control, the most efficient stations working three shifts and taking what is termed the "base" or constant load, while the less efficient work on a two or one-shift basis. Contributions to the pool may also be derived from energy produced by waste heat from industrial works or other sources. The Central Board purchase the whole of the output of the selected stations, and the owners thereof buy back the amount required for their own use; the rest of the energy is available for export to those undertakers whose generating stations have been shut down. For this purpose the grid is tapped at certain points where the voltage is reduced and from which transmission networks (usually at 33,000 volts) radiate throughout the district. The tapping of the grid is an expensive matter costing at least £40,000, and therefore cannot be done merely in order to give supplies to individuals. The latter can only get a supply through the low-tension networks of the Company or local authority operating as authorised distributors in the area, who are themselves connected to the Grid System by the secondary transmission lines. The greater availability of electric supply in rural and other areas throughout the country will thus be secured, not through direct supplies from the grid itself, but from the networks radiating from its 209 (132 and 33 k.v.) grid points.

A breakdown at any of the selected stations or any exceptional demand on a particular station will at once be met from the resources of the pool which gives the scheme its twin advantages of economy and reliability.

Provision is made for connections between the regional schemes, so that in due course the system can be worked as an interconnected whole. When this has been done, energy could, if necessary, be transmitted from Newcastle to London or from South Wales to Ipswich; but in practice such long-distance transmission will not be necessary or desirable. The conditions of supply in this country differ from those obtaining in Canada and other countries possessed of great water-power resources, where the energy so produced has to be transmitted over very long distances. It has been pointed out that hardly any part of Great Britain is more than 100 miles from the nearest coalfield, and that our extensive coast line enables sea-borne coal to be delivered to many generating stations at a low cost. It will not, therefore, be necessary for the grid to transmit large blocks of power; its function will be to enable power to be interchanged between different centres, as necessitated by varying demands and facilities of production.

The objects of this national system are to reduce the cost of generating electrical energy and to make its supply more generally available. The capital cost of the interconnecting network is far more than counterbalanced by the economies that will be effected owing to—

- (1) savings in capital outlay on generating plant at the various stations due to the installation of larger units, the release for revenue-earning purposes of spare plant now required as an emergency against breakdown, and the meeting of diversity of demand from a common system ;
- (2) savings in operating costs at the selected stations ; and
- (3) increased load picked up by the interconnecting mains.

The estimated gross savings to undertakers up to the completion of each district scheme (first 5 years) as compared with the independent operation of their stations amount to about $13\frac{1}{2}$ million pounds. The validity of the estimated savings depends mainly upon the growth of output in the industry generally and the Board being able to secure the early shutting down of the non-selected stations by the offer of cheaper supplies in bulk. As regards output it is satisfactory to find that the Commissioners' estimates are so far confirmed by the aggregate of units sold up to the 31st December, 1928.

The initial cost of the scheme was estimated in 1925 at £33,500,000 (Transmission Network £25,000,000 and Standardisation of Frequency £8,500,000), but this figure will be exceeded owing mainly to the inevitable lapse of time before commencing the work of the change of frequency, and the difficulty of calculating the expenditure involved in that part of the scheme.

It has been estimated that the execution of each scheme will occupy five years from the date of its adoption by the Board, and if the programme, as visualised by the Commissioners, is carried out, the whole scheme should be completed and in operation by the year 1936.

The Board have adopted six schemes, and have under consideration the scheme for South-West England and South Wales, which was transmitted to them on the 30th December last.

The Board have already let contracts for the transmission networks amounting to upwards of £11,000,000, and works are rapidly proceeding. Some isolated lengths of line (about 100 miles) constructed in advance are actually in operation, and the complete regional network scheduled to the Central Scotland Scheme (the first to be adopted) is expected to be ready for working in the autumn, the whole of the necessary wayleaves having been obtained.

But indications are not wanting that the execution of the adopted schemes in other parts of the country is not proceeding as rapidly as was anticipated, despite the efficient organisation set up by the Board and their unremitting efforts. What stands in the way of a more speedy advance outside the bright spot of Central Scotland? The answer may be found in one word—Wayleaves. I shall revert to this subject later, and would only point out here that any assistance which the members of this Institution can give in smoothing the pathway of the Central Board in this matter will be of the greatest assistance to the National Scheme and the community generally. For delay in the construction of the grid lines owing to wayleave difficulties means that the Board's contractors are held up and may claim compensation for delay, and, what is more important, that the Board are not able to furnish particular undertakers with the bulk supplies they require by the scheduled dates, with the result that local extensions of generating plant have to be sanctioned and the life of inefficient or relatively inefficient stations is prolonged to the detriment of the Board's supply business and the financial prospects of the scheme. Hence the vital importance to the Board and for the development of rural supplies of this question of wayleaves.

The unique feature of this great scheme for the centralisation (not "nationalisation") of the country's generating resources is the control of the generating output without the ownership of the generating stations—the latter, whether owned by local authorities or companies, will remain in the possession of their owners, but will be worked under the general direction of the Central Board. In the United States and other countries the benefits of such pooling have long been recognised, but it has been brought about by the concentration of ownership through amalgamation of undertakings or acquisition with attendant possibilities of inflation of capital. The British plan, while avoiding all such financial transactions and disturbance of interests, is designed to achieve the same ends. For this reason its developments and practical working will be watched with peculiar interest all over the world.

The Distribution of Electricity.

We have seen that the Central Electricity Board will function as a wholesale, not a retail, supplier of electrical energy, and that the Board, although vitally interested in increased output, as its finance depends upon it in the last resort, is not directly concerned with distribution.

It is not enough that the country should be covered with the h.t. transmission lines interconnecting the principal generating stations and supplying the towns with energy at a cheaper rate than hitherto: to complete the success of the grid technically and financially, a vast system of secondary networks must be developed to carry supplies to the small towns and rural districts. Arteries are useless without a general and efficient capillary system. This brings us to the problem of distribution.

The following short statement of the facts regarding the organisation and structure of the Electricity Supply Industry is necessary to understand the problems of development on the distribution side. The distribution of electricity in Great Britain at the end of 1928-29 was in the hands of 384 local authorities, 8 joint electricity authorities or boards, and 265 companies (including persons), making a total of 657, all operating under Provisional or Special Orders or Acts and termed "authorised undertakers." About two-thirds of the supply business is undertaken by local authorities and one-third by companies. The powers of supply of local authorities relate for the most part to their local government areas, but in many cases extend to considerable areas surrounding the towns. The companies comprise :—

- (a) Distribution companies authorised to supply electricity for all public and private purposes within specified areas ;
- (b) Power companies authorised to supply over large areas in bulk to authorised undertakers and for power purposes and for lighting where a power supply is given ; and
- (c) Certain recently formed companies with full powers of supply for all purposes over large areas.

The powers granted to distribution companies may be revoked in cases of default, but otherwise are granted in perpetuity subject to an option to the local authority to purchase the undertaking at the end of 42 years, and at recurring periods of 10 years on the terms laid down in the Electric Lighting Act, 1888, or in certain cases at earlier dates on terms prescribed by the Order.

The undertakings of the power companies under their Supply Acts are, however, not purchasable, but those of the recently formed companies referred to are purchasable at the end of 50 years.

The public supply of electricity has become virtually, although not legally, a monopoly, as, generally speaking, it is not the practice to grant competing powers to authorised undertakers in the same area, although there are a few instances of overlapping powers. There is Governmental control over the maximum prices which may be charged, but not over the actual prices charged.

The endeavours of the Electricity Commission during the earlier years were mainly directed to the reorganisation of the generation of electricity in the country, but latterly, and particularly since the settlement of the generation problem by the National Scheme, greater attention has been paid to the problems of distribution, especially in the rural areas. Lord Forres' Committee, while laying special stress on the necessity for cheap power supplies, made no recommendation as to improved methods of dealing with supplies to consumers in rural areas or elsewhere. Lord Wear's Committee was content to leave the organisation of distribution very much where it was, but suggested that distribution should take place over wider areas, and in particular that new companies should be formed to give effect to this suggestion.

The importance of economies in distribution is evident from the fact that out of the total outlay of £269,000,000 at the end of 1927-28, £157,600,000 or 58·6 per cent. related to transmission and distribution, while working expenses and capital charges absorb at the present time at least 50 per cent. of the revenue provided by the consumers.

Great progress has been made in work of distribution in the urban areas. At the 31st March, 1929, the areas of authorised distributors embraced about 90 per cent. of the total of 6,796 square miles comprised in the urban areas of the country and about 76 per cent. of the total population of the country; thus the greater part of the urban areas of the country, containing most of the population and offering the best prospects of development, is provided for.

Rural Electrification.

We now come to that part of the subject which is of most interest to members of The Surveyors' Institution, namely, the development of supplies in the rural areas. We have seen how the grid will assist in this direction by enabling authorised undertakers to obtain bulk supplies from it through secondary transmission networks, which in turn will convey the current to the more remote districts where it will be transformed to a still lower voltage and distributed by means of low-tension lines.

The main features of the problem of rural electrification are set out in the Eighth Annual Report of the Electricity Commissioners as follows :—

“ 17. The present incentive to rural electrification has arisen not so much on account of any non-availability of other sources of light, heat and power in rural areas, as from the growing demand for improved facilities and amenities in connection with the domestic and occupational pursuits of rural communities. Among the contributory factors reference may be made to the notable developments in connection with housing schemes and building generally, which have taken place in many rural areas during the post-war period, and to the great increase in motor transport facilities, both of which have tended to encourage the removal of dwellers and industries from the congested centres of population.

" 18. It is apparent, however, that the provision of an electrical service for small communities and individual farms and other premises located in wide areas having a low average density of population represents a substantially novel phase of electrical development in Great Britain, with problems differing in many respects from those normally associated with the development of undertakings in urban areas. Generally speaking, the potential load is much sparser in character, the distances concerned are much greater, the conditions of living are somewhat different, and the remuneration and spending capacity of the rural population are on a lower scale than obtains in urban centres.

" 19. The results already attained by a number of undertakers, who are operating outwardly from urban centres, go to show that a considerable measure of rural electrification is economically possible in cases where the rural load can be developed as a supplement to an urban load. Further experience is necessary, however, before it can be determined whether, and to what extent, the electrification of a wide rural area per se can be successfully accomplished without dependence upon an urban load as a nucleus.

" 20. While the development of electricity supply in the more congested centres of population must necessarily proceed on the basis of underground distribution, the cost of this method imposes a serious and in many cases an absolute obstacle in the way of its employment for rural electrification. Factors of the kind previously mentioned render it necessary to exercise all possible economy in capital expenditure on transmission and distribution in rural areas, and the benefits of a public supply of electricity can only be made available to rural communities in general by the fullest use of the less costly method of distribution by overhead lines, and by the best possible facilities in the way of wayleaves for their erection."

Powers of Supply in Rural Areas.

There were at 31st March, 1929, 309 authorised distributors responsible for the supply of electricity for all purposes in the rural areas. The districts allotted to them ranged from 2,000 square miles to a single parish.

This large number of undertakers, and in many cases the smallness of the areas assigned to them, suggests that the next great problem to be taken in hand is that of a more rational and economic organisation of the distribution systems of the country based on the principle of wider areas which is demanded by the most modern technical experience. The establishment of the National Grid, and the now recognised desirability of extending the benefits of electrical supplies to the rural districts, render the moment opportune for exploring the practicability of reform in this direction.

The Table on page 202 shows (1) the extent and population of the rural areas of Great Britain; (2) the mileage and population of the areas covered by powers of supply granted prior to 1920 and in the subsequent nine years; (3) the mileage and population of the unoccupied areas; and (4) the mileage and population of the area unoccupied at 31st January, 1930, but covered by applications for special orders now under consideration.

It will be seen that up to 1920 out of a total square mileage of 81,343 only 5,960, or 7 per cent. with a population of 1,979,419, or 21 per cent. of the total, was covered by supply powers. During the period of nearly 10 years, which has elapsed, powers have been granted for 41,578 square miles, or 51 per cent. of the total area, with a population of 5,722,576, or 61 per cent. of the population of the total area, and that at 31st January, 1930, 42 per cent. of the rural part of the country and 18 per cent. of the population therein was "unoccupied," i.e., not covered by supply powers. The progress made, therefore, in the granting of powers has been very marked. Moreover, further important areas are comprised in various orders made by the Commissioners but not yet approved by Parliament, and others have been applied for. The result so far as England is concerned will be that by the end of this year substantially the whole of its rural areas will be catered for so far as powers of supply are concerned. What are the obligations resting upon the undertakers possessing these powers?

When powers of supply are granted under Special Orders (formerly Provisional Orders), an obligation is placed on the undertakers to lay distribution mains (commonly known as "compulsory mains") in certain specified streets usually within a period of two years, and as regards the rest of their area the undertakers come under a further obligation to establish suitable and sufficient mains, in areas where no compulsory works are scheduled, within a period of three years. The penalty in both cases is revocation of powers by the Minister of Transport—a drastic remedy, and of doubtful benefit to would-be consumers unless there be some other company or body ready to apply for powers in the areas in question.

The Commissioners keep a watchful eye upon the fulfilment by the undertakers of their obligations, more particularly of the first-named obligation. Obviously, however, regard must be had to the financial side of the question, and, for the reasons above stated, the problem of supplies in the sparsely populated parts of these areas presents difficulties. At the same time it may not be thought unreasonable to require company undertakers responsible for such areas, who are in the happy position of being able to distribute large dividends, or municipal undertakers who can carry substantial sums to the relief of the local rates, to apply themselves to the development of the less remunerative parts of their districts.

Taking a survey of the progress which is being made by undertakers under these powers of supply in rural areas, it is found that developments are proceeding on the following lines :—

- (1) By proposals or schemes prepared by companies possessing wide areas of supply acting either singly or in association by means of a holding or finance company ;
- (2) By schemes undertaken by certain joint authorities or boards consisting mainly of representatives of local authority undertakers ;
- (3) By developments around certain large towns undertaken by the corporations of those towns under powers conferred upon them for supply in rural areas.
- (4) By various sporadic developments mostly by smaller companies.

As regards the more important developments, schemes or proposals have to be submitted for approval by the Electricity Commissioners. Considerable progress has been made in the submission and approval of these schemes, and works will proceed at a rapid rate within the next two years, and should be completed within five years.

A brief review of the operations commenced or shortly to be commenced under these various heads may be of interest.

A London company is carrying out schemes covering the whole of the counties of Essex and Kent, by means of which supplies will be given to some 260 villages.

An important trust, financed by American capital, is responsible, by means of its 52 controlled companies, for the development of a wide stretch of country extending on the south from the Isle of Wight to the western confines of Dorsetshire and north-west to Herefordshire and the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk in the north-east. Among these subsidiary companies are several important power companies, each of which is engaged in the work of development under schemes approved by the Commissioners.

In the extreme south-west of England and in South Wales important distribution developments are taking place through the instrumentality of two power companies and a number of other company organisations, which will undoubtedly lead at an early date to a rapid extension to supplies in this hitherto largely undeveloped field.

In North Wales an important finance corporation, operating through a power company and a large distribution company, is actively engaged in developing that district. Finance has hitherto been the stumbling-block in the more rapid prosecution of its schemes, but this difficulty will be removed if the financial help now being sought under the Development (Loan Guarantees and Grants) Act, 1929, is granted.

In the Midlands two joint authorities are at work in the preparation of schemes of a similar kind which will fructify in the near future.

In the East Midlands two power companies are continuously engaged in pushing supplies in various directions into rural areas, and to the south of them a large distributing company is also active in this sphere.

For Lincolnshire an Order has recently been made in favour of a company for a comprehensive scheme of rural development.

In Lancashire and Yorkshire the rural areas, which are not so large, are being catered for by two power companies and various municipalities in areas surrounding their towns. Further north one of the power companies in the north-east coast group is under obligation to submit a scheme of rural development under powers recently obtained.

In Scotland four power companies and one district board are actively engaged in extending their mains into the rural districts comprised within their large areas of supply.

Mention must also be made of the many cases in which not only large cities but smaller towns have undertaken the duty of furnishing supplies in the rural areas surrounding them.

As a notable example of the latter class of development, mention should be made of the scheme undertaken by the Bedford Corporation at the request of the Minister of Transport to demonstrate the potentialities of electricity supply in a typical rural and agricultural area. The general idea underlying it is to show what can be done by intensive development if an electrical service is placed within the reach of practically all premises within the area by means of a comprehensive scheme.

The carefully prepared estimates for this scheme show that it can be undertaken with a moderate amount of financial risk in the early years, to cover which certain financial assistance will be given by the Treasury. It is hoped that, as the result of this practical demonstration, other undertakers will be induced to embark more courageously upon similar comprehensive developments instead of extending their mains in a haphazard way and limiting their efforts to extensions which can be shown to be immediately remunerative.

Mains actually laid in Rural Areas.

There are 13,684 parishes in the rural districts of Great Britain, and at 31st March, 1929, mains had been laid in 1,586 of them with a population of 309,813, representing 0.57 persons to the acre. The total length of mains constructed was 7,215,868 yards. The parishes with no supplies whatever numbered 12,098 with a population of 6,314,681, representing 0.14 persons to the acre. Much of the undeveloped territory, however, consists of moorland and very sparsely populated regions where supplies of electricity cannot be afforded, but it is clear that the task of electrification of rural Britain has hardly been begun, and a vast field remains for future developments. It is, however, safe to say that, as a result of the schemes now in actual progress or shortly to be undertaken under the powers granted and approvals given, the position will be greatly improved in the course of the next few years, and a supply established in hundreds of villages with consequent increase in the amenities of life in the countryside.

Conference on Rural Supplies.

The Commissioners have received considerable assistance in their efforts to speed up rural electrification from the Conference on Rural Supplies, the first meeting of which was held on the 22nd November, 1927. It was attended by representatives of a number of Government departments and other bodies, and by persons interested in various aspects of the problem. Consideration has been given to a large number of questions relating to such matters as overhead line regulations, wayleaves, domestic tariffs, finance of assisted wiring, and hire or hire-purchase schemes for electrical apparatus and propaganda. Two Sub-Committees were appointed to consider—

- (a) the nature and extent of the potential demand for electricity in rural areas ; and
- (b) the bearing of the price of electricity and the cost of electrical equipment upon development in rural areas.

The Conference in July, 1928, published a report giving its views on the recommendations made by those Sub-Committees and a considerable amount of useful information on the subject of rural electrification and the use of electricity in farming operations.

Further meetings of the Conference were held in July, 1929, and on the 18th February, 1930, and in due course a second report will probably be issued. There is no doubt that the bringing together of the representatives of the numerous interests involved, including such bodies as your own Society, the Central Landowners' Association, the National Farmers' Union, and the Land Union, has been useful in stimulating public interest in rural development and in smoothing away some of the numerous difficulties which impede rapid progress.

Overhead Lines.

Prior to the passing of the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1919, local authorities had an absolute veto with regard to the erection by authorised undertakers of overhead electric lines. The Board of Trade Committee (1918) had reported as follows on this matter :—

“76. We are strongly of opinion that the legislative restrictions with regard to the use of overhead lines should be removed or amended. Under Section 14 of the Electric Lighting Act, 1882, undertakers are prohibited from placing electric lines above ground in, under or along any street without the express consent of the local authority, and under Section 10 (b) of the Schedule to the Electric Lighting (Clauses) Act, 1899, in addition to the consent of the Board of Trade, that of the local authority is also required in the case of companies authorised to supply electricity, with respect to the placing of any electric line above ground, that is to say, either in streets or across private property. These provisions apply to all undertakings established under Provisional Orders and Electric Power Acts, but in the case of the Power Acts passed in recent years there is usually a qualification as regards rural districts, where the consent of the local authority to the placing of electric lines above ground is subject to an appeal to the Board of Trade. Although some local authorities have afforded facilities to companies to erect overhead lines, there are numerous instances where local authorities have attached to their consent very onerous conditions or have absolutely refused to give it.

“77. The future development of electricity in many districts will depend largely upon facilities being granted for the use of overhead lines, and it is of vital importance that restrictions which exist at the present time should be removed or amended. It will not only tend to cheapen the supply to consumers in industrial districts, but will also be an important factor in developing the use of electricity for agricultural purposes.”

Under Section 21 of the 1919 Act the veto of local authorities was removed, but it was provided that the Minister of Transport, before giving his consent to overhead lines, should give the local authority an opportunity of being heard. The scope of this section was enlarged by Section 50 of the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1926, to include county councils where overhead lines are placed along or across any county bridge or main road vested in a county council.

It was found after the passing of the Act of 1919 that delays occurred where the Minister of Transport had to deal with an application by undertakers which involved a hearing under Section 21 and a compulsory wayleave application under Section 22 of the Act. Under the Act as it then stood the legal position was as follows: Before consenting to the lines the Minister had to give the local authority a hearing, and after giving his consent to the lawful placing of the lines he had to deal with the application for compulsory wayleaves. To simplify and accelerate procedure in such cases the Act of 1919 was amended by Section 44 of the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1926, which provides that where applications are made by authorised undertakers for consent to the placing of any electric line above ground and wayleaves have not been agreed with the owners or occupiers of any land proposed to be crossed by a line, the undertakers may serve a notice in accordance with the provisions of Section 22 of the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1919, and the Minister may proceed concurrently under Sections 21 and 22 of the Act of 1919. This procedure has been found to minimise delays considerably.

The Table on page 196 is of interest as indicating the development of electricity supply by means of overhead lines; it gives the number of applications made to the Minister by undertakers for his consent from 1920-21 to date, and the number of cases where the Minister has given hearings to local authorities.

Thus out of a total of 2,640 consents, only 85 or 3·2 per cent. have necessitated a hearing by the Minister.

There is an increasing recognition of the necessity for overhead lines in the carrying out of schemes for rural electrification, on the ground of economy in capital cost. The local authorities quite rightly charge themselves with the duty of looking after the amenities of their respective districts, and they generally receive support from the Council for the Preservation of Rural England. While the electricity undertakers are genuinely anxious to meet the views of the local authorities in this respect, cases must inevitably arise where the question of amenities has to be weighed against economic and utilitarian considerations. In certain instances it becomes a question between some admitted interference with local amenities and no supply of electricity at all. It is in disputed cases that the Minister of Transport has the deciding voice.

The question of amenities has recently come into more prominence by reason of the operations of the Central Electricity Board, whose 132,000 volt lines will be carried by lattice-work steel towers (incorrectly styled "pylons"—an ugly misnomer employed, nevertheless, by certain press organs of the highest repute) placed at intervals of a little over 300 yards. Owing to the impossibility for technical reasons of underground cables for these high-voltage lines, the necessity for overhead lines has now been recognised generally by the public; but in the lay-out of the system it is the practice of the Electricity Commissioners and the Central Board to pay every regard possible to the amenities of the various districts through which the lines will pass, and ample opportunities are afforded to the local and other bodies interested for the discussion of the precise routes to be followed.

As the result of representations made, it was thought desirable to empower the Minister to make orders giving undertakers, where necessary, compulsory powers for the felling of trees and lopping of trees and hedges where such trees or hedges obstruct or interfere with the construction, maintenance and working of any main transmission or other electric lines, and advantage was taken during the passage of the Electricity (Supply) Bill, 1926, through Parliament of inserting such a provision (Section 34). Before an order is made, opportunity is given to the owner or occupier of the lands on which the tree or hedge is growing of being heard by the Minister. Up to the present only a few applications have been made to the Minister.

Wayleaves.

Prior to the passing of the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1919, undertakers were compelled to make their own arrangements as to obtaining wayleaves for electric lines across private property. The Board of Trade Committee (1918) recommended that "further facilities should be afforded for the placing of electric lines either underground or overhead, across private property" for the reasons given in paragraph 79 of their Report. This resulted in the passing of Section 22 of the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1919, enabling authorised undertakers to place any electric line below ground across any land and above ground across any land other than land covered by buildings or used as a garden or pleasure ground, subject to the service of notice of their intention on the owner and occupier of the land and to the hearing by the Minister of Transport of any objections made within 21 days of the date of such notice. The Minister's consent may be unconditional or subject to such terms, conditions or stipulations as he thinks just, and in coming to his decision he must, amongst other things, have regard to the effect, if any, on the amenities or the value of the land. Where it is proposed to place electric lines over or upon or under any line of railway, canal or inland navigation along its course, the Minister may decide either that the line shall not be so placed or may refer the question to the Railway and Canal Commission for decision.

Under Section 11 of the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1922, lines laid under terminable agreements may be retained in position on the same terms and subject to the same conditions as were previously applicable thereto, unless objected to by the owner or occupier of the land, in which event the procedure prescribed under Section 22 of the Act of 1922 must be followed.

In order to obviate the delay which might be caused in the construction of a long length of line where most of the consents have been obtained, but one or two landowners cannot be brought to agreement, the Shropshire, Worcestershire and Staffordshire Electric Power Company obtained Section 35 of their Act of 1928, which empowers the Minister of Transport, on being satisfied as to the delay caused in such circumstances, to authorise the Company, subject to conditions, to proceed with the placing of the lines pending consideration by the Minister of the giving or withholding of his consent under Section 22.

The greater activity shown by undertakers during the last few years in developing their rural areas and the advent of the Central Electricity Board have led and will increasingly lead to the granting of the necessary wayleaves on a large scale. It will be readily understood that applications for compulsory wayleaves give very little indication of the number of wayleaves which have been negotiated by undertakers, as owners and occupiers are generally fully alive to the necessity of granting wayleaves and of meeting the undertakers in a reasonable way. It is not possible to give the number of wayleave agreements negotiated without recourse to the Minister, but the Table on page 199 may be of interest as indicating the growth in recent years of this work. It shows the number of awards given by the Minister from 1920-21 to January, 1930, and the number of cases which were settled between the parties subsequent to application being made to the Minister.

The Electricity Commissioners were some time ago pressed to recommend the Minister of Transport to adopt a standard form of wayleave agreement in order to facilitate negotiations with the owners of property. They accordingly prepared such a form in consultation with the Law Society. The draft has been submitted to the Supply Undertakers, Landowners' Association, and other bodies interested, and is now in its final shape. Meanwhile a form was agreed between the Central Electricity Board and the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for the important wayleaves required by the Board in connection with the construction of the National Grid. This form has been circulated by the Council of The Institution to their members. If and when the standard form is approved by the Minister, it will be found that it does not differ very materially from that recommended by The Institution.

I do not propose to enter upon the debateable ground of the quantum of wayleave rentals. No scale has been settled by the Minister, but the amounts applicable to various classes of cases have become more or less stabilised in practice. The suggestion has been thrown out, with what justification I do not pretend to say, that owners of property in certain districts ought to be called upon to pay rather than receive a rental, owing to the probable enhancement of the value of their land through a supply of electricity being made available; in other words, a betterment tax should be levied. The idea is certainly at present outside the realm of practical politics.

Reviewing the position as it now presents itself, we see that the National Grid no longer exists on paper only, but is on its way to becoming an established fact. Substantial progress is being made with the work of construction in face of some difficulties. The question of routes in certain picturesque parts of the country, which threatened to impede progress, is in process of solution, and with good will and the frank recognition of the paramount claims of the national scheme difficulties will disappear. The public will get accustomed to the Board's interlacing lines and their supporting towers, as they have become accustomed to the less sightly posts and lines of the Post Office and to those engineering features of our railway systems which at one time were thought to mar the landscape. As to generating stations, the protest about the new Battersea Power Station and the nuisance proceedings regarding the Barton Station on the outskirts of Manchester remind us that these super power stations on which the grid depends are not popular with the dwellers in town or country, however welcome to the local rating authorities. But while public attention is concentrated on the effects of the gaseous fumes from these stations, it ignores the emissions from many smaller stations in process of being shut down, from factories, and from the coal fires of dwelling-houses. Smoke and grit should no longer be a nuisance in a modern power station, and recent experiments go to show that the oxides of sulphur can be eliminated. The national scheme will go ahead rapidly and in a few years' time the country will be served by a comprehensive system of generation and bulk transmission based on the most modern technical practice which will effect large economies and cheapen the cost of electricity to consumers all over the country.

On the distribution side great advances are being made ; granted that the present system is complicated and in many respects uneconomical, the fact remains that by the end of this year of grace, powers of distribution will extend over the whole of England and the greater part of Wales and Scotland outside the moors and mountains. The main urban areas are being adequately catered for and may be trusted to look after themselves. The supplies in the smaller towns should improve with progressive management, and the wider recognition by undertakers of the advantages of a two-part tariff and of the necessity for hire or hire-purchase facilities.

The problem yet to be solved is that of supplies in the rural areas, but we are on the eve of substantial developments. Undertakers large and small who have obligations to develop these areas are addressing themselves to their task, although not all of them with equal energy. The difficulties must be frankly faced. Large capital outlay is involved, and is unlikely to be remunerative in the early years. With the bulk supplies from the grid, however, capital can be wholly applied to distribution purposes.

The potential demand in the country districts during the next ten years has been computed at 280 million units, representing a very substantial addition to the load on the national system. Much of this must be provided by supplies to farmers. The innate conservatism of the British farmer and his dislike of new methods has to be overcome by practical demonstrations of the advantages of the application of electricity to agriculture. Co-operation between the general body of the landowners and the farmers is also essential. The agricultural labourers must be given facilities for the wiring of their cottages and the hire of apparatus to induce them to give up oil and candles, if not coal, for electricity.

The social and economic advantages to the rural community and the nation of an electricity supply have been so often pointed out that they do not need to be emphasised to the members of this Institution. Owners of property and others concerned, by doing what in them lies to facilitate the progress of the national scheme and the operations of the distribution authorities engaged in the difficult task of supplying the rural community, can make a definite contribution to the national welfare.

A DISCUSSION took place on

Recent Developments in the Electricity Supply of Great Britain, with Special Reference to Rural Electrification.

Mr. H. E. SHERWIN (Member of Council) said that when he was given the privilege of proposing a vote of thanks to the author, at first he feared that the position had become so complicated as regards wayleaves that circumstances would not enable him to accept the invitation; but he had come to the conclusion that it would be ungracious if he did not do so. Many of those present had, no doubt, heard too much about wayleaves recently, and he, like others, had been almost living with them for some time. Therefore to have information about the general electricity development was most valuable and interesting. The Secretary in asking him to move a vote of thanks had told him that the Paper did not lend itself to a lengthy discussion. While he agreed with this, he would venture to trespass more on their good will and time than perhaps he should, and give them some results of his own experience.

Travelling about the country, as he did, from the north of Hertfordshire into Northumberland, including all the chief areas of depressed industries, he had been greatly impressed by the bad trade conditions there prevailing. The public at large, he felt sure, scarcely realised the position, for example, in the Manchester districts or in the county of Durham. With regard to agriculture his own diagnosis was that about 65 per cent. of the farmers at the present time were insolvent. He looked forward to electricity as a possible remedy, in part at any rate, for this unhappy situation.

There was no doubt the country had been allowed to lag behind in its industrial development, and members should realise its backwardness in that respect. Some statistics, for which he was indebted to Sir Philip Dawson, M.P., showed that Germany consumed nearly 40 per cent. more electricity per head of population than the people in this country, Sweden 65 per cent., the United States 150 per cent., Switzerland 350 per cent., and Canada 400 per cent. It was thought that it was not far out to say that, while Japan led in industrial electrification, her figure in that respect being 88 per cent., with the United States 80 per cent., and Germany 70 per cent., the figure for Great Britain was only about 54 per cent. The most depressed industries were the most backward as regards electrification. The electrification of the iron and steel industry, it was stated, was 42 per cent. as compared with 76 per cent. for this industry in Germany. In the cotton industry our electrification represented only 19 per cent. as compared with 66 per cent. in the United States. In Germany 85 per cent. of the machinery used in agriculture was driven electrically, and some 750 million units were consumed annually in agricultural areas in that country compared with 2 million units in Great Britain. Only 5 per cent. of the parishes in Germany had no supply of electricity.

The Electricity Commissioners, as everyone appreciated, were doing a valuable and essential work in the direction of electrical development. There was greater expedition now as a result of the programme of the Central Board. But it seemed to him that this country, as had occurred before in other matters, was barring the stable door after the horse had bolted, for had not Sir Harry Haward admitted that the energy required by this country would be concentrated in about 100 stations in lieu of about 500 stations now in operation. That meant that much public money had already been wasted.

There was difference of opinion with regard to the provisions of the Act as regards wayleaves, and it would assist matters if there could be some test case at an early date to settle the question.

He was pleased to note that the lecturer stated that no scale had been settled by the Ministry of Transport for the wayleave quantum. It was, therefore, surprising to find that in the earlier stages of those wayleave agreements the circular-letters accompanying "Forms of Consent" appeared to suggest that the scale therein set out was that approved by the Ministry of Transport. He was afraid that that had led owners and occupiers to accept rentals which otherwise they might have refused.

Sir Harry Haward had asked for the co-operation of The Surveyors' Institution, and he (the speaker) felt sure that all members were anxious to co-operate so far as was compatible with their clients' interests. The situation, however, was not without difficulties. He himself had been having a little difficulty with a certain company, who in writing what purported to be more or less a final letter, drew his attention to a case described in a certain journal, extracts from which he read. The journal in question stated that in an old-world village situated in an agricultural county in England, which possessed a beautiful ancient church and some delightful houses, there was great rejoicing when arrangements were made for the supply of electric light and power. Just outside the village there were two fair-sized estates, one belonging to "a celebrated public body" governed by a number of well-meaning gentlemen in London, "while the other belonged to a public-spirited squire." The electric light mains to feed the village had to pass over one or other of those estates, and the proper way, it was stated, was over the former property, but the owners would not consent, so that the authorised undertakers were faced with three alternatives, either to call for an enquiry by the Ministry of Transport, to re-plan the whole route and re-open negotiations, or to give up the entire scheme. They chose, it was stated, the second of those alternatives, and the squire who had consented to the mains passing over his estate now had "the pleasure of surveying from all "his front windows a line of poles crossing the meadows "below his house." That was one of the stories, it was stated, in which everybody lived happily ever after, even though it was admitted "the family had given up their "objections to an eyesore." He was pleased to have that journal available. In a case in the Midlands in which the speaker had been trying to persuade the Central Electricity Board and the authorised undertakers so to act as to do his client's land as little damage as possible, the latter had suddenly sent a compulsory notice, the first he had received. He would only say that the notice was of no value.

With regard to the form of agreement, Mr. Lloyd Roberts, Solicitor to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, was present at that meeting, and no doubt would be speaking, so he would leave him to deal with that matter, and members would be grateful for his advice on the legal position as regards wayleaves under the Acts.

He wished to conclude with a few remarks on the claim of the Minister of Transport to settle rentals for wayleaves.

Government Departments had for many years asked The Institution's advice on matters arising under Acts or Bills, or on matters with regard to which the Government proposed to legislate, and that advice had always been given unbiassed. Prejudices and politics had to be dropped once the portals of The Institution were crossed. Much had recently been heard about "despotism" and the ousting of the jurisdiction of the Courts. The speaker believed he was right in saying that the Electricity Acts were the first statutes to oust the jurisdiction of The Institution or of members of the profession on questions of value, and to place a Minister of the Crown in the position of a chartered surveyor qualified to act as an arbitrator between one not entirely disinterested Government department and another. The Minister of Transport had acted in many cases already in that capacity, and he (the speaker) submitted that if the Board or authorised undertakers could acquire wayleaves compulsorily at rentals, then, whatever Government was in power, it should forthwith place the settlement of disputes in the hands of the two official arbitrators, members of the profession, who were appointed by the Legislature to settle disputed compensation payable by public bodies. If they were overburdened, then a third official arbitrator should be appointed.

The speaker concluded by moving a most hearty vote of thanks to Sir Harry Haward for his Paper.

Mr. R. W. TRUMPER (Professional Associate), in seconding the vote of thanks, said that he hoped in the case of the 132,000 volt lines it would be possible for some means of co-operation to be devised between the authority and the owners of the various estates. As matters now stood, he had to act for people who owned large pieces of land, and the first notification received was a formal one to the effect that they had to put up with what it was proposed to do. The representatives of the Central Electricity Board had been very good in some cases in endeavouring to meet their wishes and remove the lines. But there ought to be some central organisation for getting in touch with owners, to sound them, so that genuine objections could be sifted out from those which were made on trivial or obstructive grounds. If that was done, the Board would find that owners would help them to get their line through instead of delaying it.

Another point was that the electricity undertakers had made difficulties for themselves by placing the negotiations for wayleaves in the hands of people who knew nothing whatever about landed estates. In too many cases one found that an electrical engineer, who knew nothing of the difference in value between one field and another, was responsible for the negotiations. A case had come before his notice where an electrical engineer had settled the whole of the line and expressed himself as pleased because he had done so at so much a pole. Some of the land was worth 50s. an acre, and some of it only 5s. an acre. That engineer paid the same rate quite cheerfully for all the different kinds of land, whereas if a valuer had been appointed, the wayleaves would have been negotiated at far less trouble and expense. If the engineer and the valuer were to work in conjunction for the electrical authority, better rates could be devised and the cost of the line materially reduced.

As to rentals, it seemed unfair to the landowner that the amount he was to obtain, supposing he could not receive what he considered fair, was to be settled by another Government department who might or might not be—but in any case seemed to be—working on the side of the undertaker. The landowner thus obtained the impression that his case was not being settled by an unbiassed party. The Ministry's officials had been known to mediate in cases where the rental had not been agreed, and he knew of several cases where the representatives of the electrical undertakings had been to the Minister for advice. That was not satisfactory. He felt that the Minister might well be empowered to lay down the direction of the line and the height of the poles, but he was not a competent person to settle the £ s. d. It was also apt to be used in evidence against the owner. "Oh, but the Minister has settled so many cases on the "same lines." What had that consideration to do with the matter?

Another point in the statute was that the Minister might give his consent either unconditionally or subject to such terms, conditions and stipulations as he might think fit. The Electricity Commissions had read into that provision that the Minister could settle the compensation. Obviously "conditionally" was meant to refer only to the site of the pole and not to any question of money.

Another point which the undertakers raised was that they were still trying to keep a flat rate throughout, and he had frequently been told that not more than so much per pole could be paid in any given case because, further along the line, the Minister had held an arbitration and had settled the rate which should be paid. With high-tension lines, the rental was such a small part of the cost that the price per pole seemed to have assumed too much importance. The authorities might well meet the landowner in that respect far more than they did.

With regard to the agreement issued by the Commissioners, it was far too wordy and bulky a document for the ordinary practical man to handle. If the Electricity Commissioners wished to reduce costs they should adopt an agreement which was concise, short, and intelligible. It required a lawyer to understand it. On the other hand, the form published in the Journal of The Institution could be understood by ordinary persons.

Mr. W. LLOYD ROBERTS (Solicitor to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners) (Visitor) said that the first question which interested him in connection with the Paper was, of course, that of wayleaves and compensation. The Ministry of Transport claimed to be the authority for settling the amount of compensation to be paid. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners took exception to that, and obtained the opinion of learned counsel, who advised them clearly that the landowner was entitled to have that compensation settled under the Lands Clauses Acts. There was no doubt in counsel's mind what was the proper tribunal to deal with the matter. He did not want to raise that question too acutely, because it was a controversial subject between those for whom he spoke and several of the undertakers at the present time.

The next question that Sir Harry Haward had brought out was the delay that took place in getting those wayleaves. From the landowner's point of view there was no advantage to be obtained in obstructing the placing of the towers or poles unless he wanted to try and get the position of them shifted. This could sometimes be done provided he knew where they were going to be placed. To do this he must approach the undertakers, and ask that the towers or poles might be placed in a different position. But if the position was settled and the amount of compensation to be paid could not be agreed, the best course to be adopted was to allow the undertakers to go on and set up the pole, subject to the terms of the standard form of agreement which for the moment held the field—the form adopted by The Surveyors' Institution in conjunction with the Land Agents' Society and the Central Landowners' Association—and allow the question of compensation to stand over. This would at least have the advantage that with the passage of time the owner would be able to see exactly the kind of damage caused by the presence of the mast or the tower, the working of the line generally, what sort of footpaths would be made across the land towards the pole, and whether used by the public. Thus he would have some tangible evidence to bring forward in support of his claim.

For the negotiation of wayleave agreements, other corporations, like railway companies or tramway companies, employed surveyors or land agents to assess the compensation, and he thought that the great Electricity Supply undertakings should adopt the same principle. It was all very well to say that in the past they got on very well, but what did they put up? A single pole, like a telegraph pole. But if it was a question of 80-foot towers, with bases extending for 16 feet, it was obviously a very different matter. One could not argue with many of those gentlemen because they did not know anything about the land, and it should be a matter for consideration whether some influence could not be brought to bear upon the undertakers to employ proper surveyors. The persons employed, who were generally engineers, said that if agreement was not immediately forthcoming they would go off at once to the Ministry of Transport to get it settled.

Mr. E. WITTON BOOTH (Fellow) referred to the injury caused to the amenities of a district by the presence of overhead lines, and more particularly main transmission cables. Pictures had been shown that evening illustrating in some instances how inconspicuous, if not pleasing, the poles and standards were, and how little in such cases they interfered with the landscape. The speaker had had the opportunity, however, for some eighteen months or two years of being particularly acquainted with those long lines of main transmission poles and standards which ran into the city of Melbourne and elsewhere in Australia, and also to the cities of Wellington and Auckland in New Zealand. There, indeed, there was no mistaking them. They could be seen for miles, and such long transmission lines made undoubtedly an obvious mark on the landscape.

One point on which he would like to ask Sir Harry Haward a question was with regard to the danger arising from highly charged mains carried overhead in the case of may be only sparsely populated areas. During last summer he had been in touch with one or two electricity undertakings where, for rating purposes, he had had to assess the life of overhead electrical distribution installations. The test lay on the life of the standards. They were principally timber poles, and the life appeared to be not more than 15 or 18 years. When the installations were first erected there was, of course, almost perfect security, but after perhaps 10 years or longer a stage was reached when the pole was not as secure as formerly, and thus thereafter a certain element of danger developed, naturally increasing with the years.

At one part of his Paper Sir Harry Haward had dealt with the factors which determined the position of power stations. The speaker thought that there was one factor which had been omitted, and that the provision for the cooling of the waste water from the condensers was an important factor in deciding the position of the power station.

Another minor point on which perhaps Sir Harry might satisfy his curiosity was as to why, with modern plant, practically all voltages were expressed in multiples of 11, such as, say, 3,300, 6,600, 33,000, and so forth.

Sir Harry Haward had stated that "smoke and grit" should no longer be a nuisance in a modern power station, "and that recent experiments had shown that the oxides of sulphur could be eliminated." The speaker had seen an electric-power station, however, where as the result of the escape or leakage of pulverised fuel, although the contractors had not yet removed their plant from the works, a nicely designed building erected for the plant had been completely spoilt.

The vote of thanks was put from the Chair, and carried unanimously.

Sir HARRY HAWARD, after thanking the members for the cordial way in which they had received the Paper, said that he felt the discussion had turned so largely on the question of wayleaves and incidental matters that it would be better if, at that late hour, he furnished the Secretary with a written reply to some of the more important questions.

The following written reply has been received from Sir HARRY HAWARD :—

My replies to the principal points raised in the course of the discussion are as follows :

1. Reference was made to a "Scale approved by the Ministry of Transport." I can only repeat that there is no such official scale. The Minister in giving his decisions naturally endeavours to observe as much uniformity as possible, deviating from the normal rentals allowed in order to meet the merits of particular cases ; this is surely desirable.

2. The employment of surveyors is a matter for the undertakers concerned, but it would probably lead to a greater expense which it is desirable to avoid. The negotiations with owners require tact and not necessarily a knowledge of the value of land. A great deal depends upon the manner in which owners are approached, and the agents of some undertakers are more successful than others in this respect. The idea of establishing some central organisation for approaching owners is not one that commends itself to me.

3. With regard to the suggestion that the form of agreement (presumably the one approved by The Surveyors' Institution) is too wordy and bulky, no standard form has yet been approved by the Minister, but if adopted, it is not expected that it will be used for ordinary simple cases ; the undertakers will probably retain their existing form for such cases, and the standard form would be used for the larger or more complicated agreements.

4. I was aware that counsel had expressed an opinion that it is not competent for the Minister of Transport to fix wayleave rentals, but the Minister and the Electricity Commissioners have been advised in the contrary sense.

5. There is a certain inevitable delay in getting wayleaves, but cases occur where landowners do not answer letters, and other cases where the landowner refuses consent and then does not trouble to appear at the inquiry.

6. Danger of Overhead Lines.—The Electricity Commissioners' regulations are stringent, and accidents from falling wires are extremely rare. It is not agreed that the life of the poles is "not more than 15 to 18 years"; properly creosoted fir poles should last at least 25 to 30 years, and the General Post Office and Railway Companies have many poles with a life of 40 to 50 years. Undertakers are accustomed to inspect their lines at regular intervals, and there is no reason to believe that they would not at once replace poles which showed signs of decay.

7. The various voltages referred to illustrate the advance in engineering knowledge and practice. In calculations allowance is usually made for a difference of 10 per cent. between the receiving and the generating ends of the line ; thus a 6,000 volt (receiving end) cable is provided to enable 6,600 volts to be applied at the generating end ; and a 10,000 volt line becomes, with the 10 per cent. allowance, 11,000, and so on. Expressed as the receiving voltage, the increases are multiples of 10, and as the transforming voltage the increases are multiples of 11.

Mr. FRANK HUNT, C.V.O. (Member of Council), has sent the following written communication :—

It is good to have an aspect of the matter presented from an angle from which, hitherto, The Institution has not been able to consider it. I think Sir Harry can be assured of close co-operation between The Institution and the electrical industry in giving effect to the schemes, but it must be on a distinct understanding that more reasonable consideration is given interests entitled to be consulted, other than those of the industry pure and simple. Sir Harry waxed eloquent over the advantages to rural districts of the development of schemes. I noticed, however, that he gave no explanation as to how the development of main transmission lines is likely to be of any help in the way he so graphically described and illustrated by slides. As far as we understand it, none of the main transmission lines can be tapped, and it is only with secondary schemes which have made no progress at all, that it would be possible for farmers in rural districts to have the advantages he so nicely described. I am afraid that the statement in the form in which he made it is likely to mislead, even informed persons like members of The Surveyors' Institution : and I know from experience that the negotiators for wayleave easements make similar representations without explaining that the farmers and cottagers will not be able to take current from the lines for which the wayleaves are sought.

Another point which emerges from Sir Harry's Paper is that relating to wayleave agreements. There are what are referred to in his Paper wayleave awards, by the Minister of Transport. I believe the idea that the Minister can fix wayleave payments, and in cases of dispute make awards, is altogether misconceived. There appears to be no authority for it in any of the statutes concerned, and it is an entire misreading of the powers vested in the Minister to suggest that the power to sanction a line of overhead wires and a compulsory grant of wayleave powers on such terms and conditions as he may think fit, gives him power to settle questions of compensation. The statute being silent on the matter, the Lands Clauses Acts, modified by any subsequent provisions such as the Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919, would, I venture to suggest, apply, and I am sure that sooner or later the Minister's power to do what he now purports to do will be questioned. Moreover, the power with which he is dealing relates to wayleaves, and I think it is difficult to construe a wayleave as including the taking possession of a substantial plot upon which to erect a considerable structure and from which the owner must obviously be excluded. In all legislation dealing with the acquisition of land for public purposes, the taking of land involves the service of a notice to treat and the consequences flowing therefrom.

These points are not raised merely for the purpose of making it difficult for the Central Electricity Board, or the Electricity Commissioners or the Ministry of Transport to make progress with their schemes, but it is desirable for right methods to be followed in securing such rights as are necessary to carry out the schemes in a proper and regular way.

PAPER 527.

THE FUTURE OF BRITISH AGRICULTURE.By Professor T. Wibberley.

To be read at the Ordinary General Meeting of The Surveyors' Institution on Monday, 7th April, 1930.

Historical.

Some twenty-five years ago, having in mind the low prices existing for cereals, the climatic difficulties in connection with cereal growing, the increasing cost of farm labour, at least in the north of England, the vast superiority of these countries for live-stock production, I began to investigate the possibilities of arable stock farming.

The subject was not a new one. Over 200 years ago "Turnip Townshend" and others had demonstrated the possibility of feeding more cattle on the land by the growing of roots and seeds hay. Prior to his time large numbers of cattle were slaughtered and salted down on the advent of winter, and those allowed to live to replenish the depleted herds were wintered in a state of semi-starvation. The introduction of roots and seeds hay along with the straw and pulse crops grown on the farm made it possible to feed as many live-stock in winter as in summer and incidentally have a supply of fresh meat throughout the winter months.

Even prior to Townshend's time it would seem that arable cropping for sheep consumption was in existence. For instance, in the Tempest, Act IV., Scene 1, Shakespeare has the following passage:—

"Ceres, most bounteous lady, thy rich leas,
Of Wheat, Rye, Barley, Vetches, Oats, and Peas,
Thy turfy mountains, where live nibbling sheep,
And flat meads, thatched with stover them to keep."

It will be noted that, commencing with rye, the forage crops are given in the same sequence as they are folded off to this day. The "turfy mountains" are what we now speak of as downlands; "thatched" is used in its old sense of "covered in," and, contrary to what appears in the Malene

Edition of Shakespeare, "stover" "is not a kind of thatch," but the name still used in many sheep-farming districts for various types of clover, notably trifolium and hop trefoil.

Prior to my commencing investigations on the subject, there had been periodical attempts to introduce more forage crops into our arable system. Two notable pioneers were the late Professor Long and Peer. The latter's efforts were chiefly responsible for the introduction, or perhaps the spread, of the system of soiling crops in the Channel Islands.

Stave Silos.

Earlier attempts had also been made to extend forage cropping and the preservation of forage crops for animal feeding by the introduction of the silage system. The idea seems to have been first promulgated in Central Europe, and is dealt with in an article which appeared in "The Transactions of the Highland and Agricultural Society of 1843." Interest in the subject was again renewed about 1879 to 1882, due to the occurrence of several wet seasons. In the latter year the Viscomte de Chezelles attended the Royal Show at Reading, and described his method whereby he had ensiled about 1,000 tons of clover, tares, lucerne, &c.

Two years later, following the interest created by this enterprising Frenchman, the Field published a book entitled Silos for British Fodder Crops.

In 1883-4 George Fry, F.L.S., who had been engaged on a study of the important subject of silage temperature control, published his result. Interest in the subject seemed to have lapsed for a time, and was renewed in England through the introduction of the American stave silo idea in 1910 by F. B. Smith, O.M.G., Vice-Principal of the South Eastern College.

Experiments on the ensiling of maize were later conducted at Rothamstead, but they were not very successful.

About 1908 I, in association with several other people, caused to be erected several stave silos in Ireland, and carried on numerous experiments to investigate the making of different forms of silage, my chief interest being in the growing of silage crops as part and parcel of my system of forage cropping for stock-feeding purposes.

In later years George Jacques did much to popularise silos, and Amos and Woodham at Cambridge also conducted a series of investigations of far-reaching importance. The latest development of the silo idea has been the introduction by Gascoigne, of Reading, of the all-metal silo, which, amongst others, has the advantages of being practically weather-proof, can be erected by unskilled labour, and can be taken down and re-erected, in the case of a tenancy terminating.

A study of the evolution of the silage idea reveals a very curious feature. All the attention of the investigations seems to have been given to silo construction, actual silage-making and comparative feeding experiments—the latter not of a very striking nature. Little or no attention was given to the improvement of the seeding, manuring and cultivation of the actual silage crops, with a view to making the crops more productive, both as regards yields and composition, and therefore profitable crops to grow. Indeed in the early days of ensilage it was assumed that good ensilage could be made from waste grass, spoiled hay, hedge clippings, and even bracken. Maize crops intended for silage were raised from stocks of seed which had been in existence for perhaps a hundred years, without any attempt at seed improvement. Tare mixtures were sown in any sort of a rough fashion, generally on unmanured stubble land.

When the writer commenced his investigations on forage crops he found practically an unexplored field. Rape, stubble turnip, rye were sown in autumn in a very haphazard fashion; no attempts to improve the seeds of these crops or methods of cultivation seem to have been made.

If any experiments had been conducted on the all-important subject of the manuring of forage crops, there were no available records, and such printed information as was available re the growing of these crops was either useless or, worse still, erroneous.

As a matter of fact, forage cropping was known as catch cropping. Something to be done on farms situated in very exceptional districts. Even in such districts catch cropping was not regarded as a very serious part of the farming economy.

Beef Shortage.

I have by way of introduction given this brief historical survey of previous attempts towards arable stock farming, because, unless I am under a complete misapprehension, the future of British agriculture will consist of more intensive stock farming, both as regards arable and grass.

To an assemblage of this nature, I need not dilate upon the present serious position of the arable farmer who is raising crops, cereals, potatoes, &c., for direct sale. When in the daily press some 18 months ago I drew attention to the system of importing wheat from Germany, under what in practice amounts to a bounty-fed system, there were few who realised how seriously such a system would hit the British cereal grower. Cereals of all types are now being imported from many countries at prices far below our minimum cost of production. The same is also true of potatoes and peas.

If importation of these types of farm crops is to continue without some form of protection or subsidy to the farmer, then we may rule out of court any possibility of continuing arable farming on the lines indicated. On the other hand, when we come to make a world survey of the position of animal husbandry, the outlook is decidedly hopeful.

As long ago as April, 1927, in a pamphlet I wrote on forage cropping I indicated that we were coming into a period of a world shortage of beef. My forecast later received support from the excellent articles which appeared in the Times of 8th, 9th, and 10th April, 1929, and 24th February, 1930, from the pen of that great economic authority, Sir William S. Haldane. Quoting from the articles of Sir William and several other sources of information, the position at present is as follows.

Due to the high prices prevailing during the War, and the early days of the post-war period, America had increased her cattle population to 73,000,000. By 1926 the number had fallen to 60,000,000, and by 1929 the American cattle population was down to 57,500,000, the lowest number since 1878.

Twenty-five years ago America was a large beef exporting country; by 1925 her beef exports had fallen to a mere 2,000 tons of beef; and by the end of 1929 the trade had changed to an import one of 53,571 tons of beef, and no less than half a million head of cattle in addition.

After long agitation our ports were thrown open to Canadian cattle. In 1925 we imported 110,000 head from Canada, and 4,464 tons of beef. This import trade has now ceased, because America buys all Canada can supply at a better price than we can afford. America is now importing beef and mutton from both New Zealand and Australia. On the other hand, although beef cannot in the ordinary way be imported from the Argentine to America, it is admitted if canned, and for the 10 months ending 29th October the volume of Argentine canned beef had increased from 45,000,000 lb. imported in the corresponding 10 months period a year previously to 80,000,000 lb.

Of our imported beef 40 per cent. comes from the Argentine, but our supplies from all beef countries are falling off very considerably.

In 1929 the decrease in imported beef declined by 700,000 cwts., or 5 per cent. compared with 1928; and by comparison with 1927, the 1929 beef imports fell 1,600,000 cwts., or 13½ per cent. Other striking facts are the numbers of cattle slaughtered in 1928 in the Argentine declined by 404,000 head, or approximately 12½ per cent., whilst the wholesale prices of Argentine beef at Smithfield has advanced from 3s. 7d. per 8 lb. in December, 1927, to 5s. 2d. per 8 lb. in December, 1929.

There have been also very serious declines in recent years in the cattle population of New Zealand, Australia, and, indeed, practically every beef-producing country.

Faced with a world shortage of beef prices, and of course a sympathetic rise in prices of all types of meat products, it seems to me that our future policy should be to shape our farming system towards animal, rather than cereal, huscountry. This, of course, would be following the traditional method expressed by the phrase "down corn, up horn."

At present—and nothing better illustrates the parlous position of agriculture—we have reached a position whereby both corn and horn are on the down grade. In England and Wales during 1925, not only did the arable area shrink by 155,000 acres, but there was a big decrease in the country's live-stock population. The actual figures are as follows:—

Cattle decrease	...	70,400
Sheep	"	296,200
Pigs	"	606,500
Horses	"	39,400
Total decrease		1,012,500

In recent years we have witnessed an attempt to improve our existing system of summer grazing by what is known as intensive grassland treatment. I doubt if the system will ever make much headway. In the first instance it is too costly. In a dry season like 1925 the system is a failure, and setting aside these difficulties, due to the great preponderance of grass to arable, practically every season we experience a very big fall in cattle and sheep prices when farmers desire to clear their land, and a correspondingly big rise in prices in springtime when lands have to be stocked. We really want more winter food to stabilise cattle prices.

To come now to the main theme of my Paper. At already indicated prior to the War I had worked out an improved system of intensive forage cropping which came to be known as "continuous cropping." The essential idea was to grow steep forage crops for conversion into animal products. Under the system corn growing was reduced to a minimum, just sufficient being grown to provide straw for winter and cereals for home consumption. The system also aimed at a more even distribution of labour throughout the year, the elimination as far as possible of costly hand labour for the clearing of land and the thinning of roots. In addition, the aim was to have the land carrying a crop from the beginning to the end of the rotation, thus minimising the loss of fertilising ingredients during the winter months. The type of crops grown in winter were what, for a better term, I might describe as low-temperature crops, crops highly resistant to frost and able to make growth in the late autumn and early spring, periods at which in the more recent years growth is by no means arrested. Finally, realising the possibilities of tractor development, the continuous-cropping system was designed so that the fullest possible advantage could be obtained from tractors and their complementary implements. Silage and such forage crops as marrow-stem kale, thousand-headed kale and rape-kale are essential parts of the system, and to a large extent take the place of roots.

The system was making considerable headway in pre-War time. At the request of the Ministry of Agriculture I lectured at several colleges on the subject, and contributed articles to the Ministry's "Journal." Finally Sir Daniel Hall, F.R.S., made a first-hand study of the system on several farms under my direction, and wrote a very commendatory article, which appeared in the Times of 14th April, 1914.

The War demand for cereals caused people to lose interest in "continuous cropping"; but taking a broad view of the present position of agriculture, realising that for the carrying out of my ideas of arable farming there are far greater facilities to-day than there were when the system was first promulgated, and repressing, as best one can, the enthusiasm inseparable from the pioneer, I feel that the continuous-cropping system may yet point the way out of our present farming difficulties.

Continuous-Cropping Rotation.

Perhaps at this point it will be well to set down a forage cropping rotation, say one suited to the production of mutton, and milk or beef:—

First break:—Autumn-sown lea corn.

Second ,, $\frac{1}{4}$ of the area rye.
 $\frac{1}{4}$ trefoil mixture.
 $\frac{1}{4}$ trifolium ,, $\frac{1}{4}$ vetch ,,

The trefoil and trifolium mixtures are sown in springtime, using the winter-sown corn as a nurse crop; the rye and vetch mixtures are sown on the stubble in autumn. The crops are folded off in the order given, and the land sown with the successional crops in the following manner: Marrow-stem kale after rye, thousand-headed kale after trefoil, early rape-kale after trifolium, and late rape-kale after vetches. These crops will give green feeding from October to, say, the end of March.

Third break :—Part winter-sown vetch mixture.

„ spring „ „ „

The winter-sown vetch is cut in June and made into hay; and the spring-sown cut in July and made into silage, to provide green feeding when through stress of weather or other causes the kales would not be available for food.

Fourth and fifth break :—Sainfoin or seeds hay under-sown in the vetches, or where suitable the land could be sown down for three or four years with lucerne.

As supplementary food when needed, roots could be raised intensively on a special piece of ground set aside for the purpose; and on this point I may say, by keeping this piece of land well limed, I have found it possible to grow alternate crops of swedes and mangolds for years without any appearance of disease. The root land could also be liberally manured, and by so doing and sowing the best of seeds I have found it possible to average 45 tons of mangolds and 35 tons of swedes per acre.

Now when first the continuous-cropping system was promulgated, such a rotation as above would not have been possible. The introduction of cheap synthetic nitrogen has brought down the price of all forms of nitrogenous manures, and in the knowledge gained as regards the manurial requirements of forage crops, it is now possible to force the first series of forage crops along so as to have them ready for consumption two or three weeks earlier than would be the case if the fertilisers were not applied.

Again, by the liberal use of fertilisers, including nitrogen, especially nitrate of soda, which for the promotion of leafy growth and a vigorous start is the best nitrogenous manure, kales sown as late as early June will be ready for consumption by October, and July sown will be ready for February and March.

Three of the forage crops sown largely consist of leguminous plants, and according to the text-books of twenty years ago, since these plants can abstract nitrogen from the atmosphere, a direct application of nitrogenous fertiliser is unnecessary. A more erroneous statement was never committed to writing. As I shall show later, not only can the growth of these crops be speeded up by nitrogenous fertilisers, but their nutritive value, especially as regards the reduction in fibre and the increase in albuminoids, can be increased. I shall return to this later.

New Forage Crops.

In the early continuous-cropping schemes marrow-stem and rape-kale were not included. I commenced to experiment with the former in 1904, but it took seven years' constant selection before I got strains sufficiently hardy to withstand the winter, and several more years' writing before seedsmen included marrow-stem kale in their catalogue. Other people who worked on this plant had a similar experience.

As regards rape-kale it took Mrs. Wibberley and myself seven years to breed and fix this as a type. We commenced work on this plant in 1906, and it is only within the last three years that the plant has become known. You will find it in most seed catalogues now, generally described as though each particular firm had bred and introduced the plant—a most disgusting form of plagiarism, and one from which there is no redress. Rape-kale is sufficiently hardy to stand such severe winters as 1928-29. Very heavy frosts injure the leaves, but I have never known the plant to be killed. Another important feature is that it flowers from four to six weeks later than any other from of Brassicæ.

Quick cultivation and the conserving of soil moisture for the successful growing of summer-sown forage crops are absolutely essential. In the days when we had to depend on horse labour it was only possible to sow kale after rye, trefoil mixture, &c., on a very small scale. Long before any considerable area of land folded off from April to June could be cultivated and re-sown, the land would have completely dried out. The recent introduction of the light-weight tractor capable of ploughing three to four furrows at a time, and ploughing in late spring and summer as much as 8 acres per day, and do other cultivation work at a similar pace, has made possible the sowing of a second forage crop in summer over a large acreage. Furthermore, rain at the time of year indicated does not stop tractor land cultivation, but facilitates it, especially if the tractor is fitted with self-cleaning wheels, to my mind the finest invention which has taken place in tractor development.

In northern areas, even with the liberal use of fertilisers, it may not be possible to feed off crops of rye, trefoil, &c., in time to sow kales to give autumn feed. Quite recently, however, I have been testing a transplanting machine which opens up big possibilities for my system of cropping. Instead of sowing the seeds of kale in the open field, the plants could be raised in a bed and transplanted with this machine, thereby securing several weeks' growth before planting, and eliminating the costly hand labour of thinning out. I might say I have also tested the machine for transplanting cereal plants. The machine is not quite perfect yet, but I see no reason why it should not be made so, and later it may be possible for us to adopt the Chinese method of corn growing by transplanting, and increase our corn yields enormously by so doing.

Home-grown Albuminoids.—Grass Cake.

Now I come to one of the most important features of my recent investigations. Even with better prices for animal products, I doubt if much profit to the farmer will be forthcoming so long as he is so dependent on purchased foodstuffs for the production of beef, mutton, milk, &c.

Under our present farming system, no matter how low the price of home-grown cereals a farmer is compelled to buy feeding cakes and meals to get sufficient albuminoids to balance his rations.

Realising the importance of home-grown albuminoids, experiments are at present in progress to ascertain whether it is economically possible to dry artificially young grass (known to be rich in albuminoids) and press the product into the form of cake.

Whilst hoping these experiments may be successful, one would imagine the cost and time involved in repeatedly cutting, gathering and carting grass when only 2 or 3 inches high would be prohibitive.

The problem of cheap home-grown albuminoids is one which has long occupied my attention. Ten years ago I carried out a series of experiments to ascertain whether by top-dressing mixed crops of vetch and cereals it would be possible to force on a sufficiently bulky growth to make it worth while to cut the crops when in a young stage of growth and save them either as hay or ensilage.

In December of 1919 a sample of vetch and cereal hay which had been manured with a complete mixture of artificials consisting of 3 cwts. superphosphate, 3 cwts. kainite and $1\frac{1}{2}$ cwts. nitrate of soda per acre was submitted to the Irish Department of Agriculture, and on analysis gave the following results. For the sake of comparison the analysis of a sample of Bombay cotton cake is given:—

Total dry matter	...	88	...	...	86	38
Albuminoids	...	20	...	...	15	12
Oil	...	4	75	...	2	72
Carbohydrates	...	35	...	...	41	12
Fibre	...	22	...	...	20	87
Moisture	...	12	...	...	14	62

It will be seen from the above that in the non-albuminous constituents—oil, carbohydrates, and fibre—the two foods are almost identical, and 1 ton of the vetch and cereal hay contains as much albuminoids as 15 cwts. of the Bombay cotton cake. Three or 4 tons of vetch and cereal hay can be grown per acre for less than the cost of 1 ton of Bombay cotton cake.

Later analysis of lucerne hay, and also silage made from a mixture of beans, cereals, and vetch, cut young and manured in a somewhat similar way to that described above, are appended:—

	Lucerne Hay, per cent.		Bean, Cereal, and Vetch Silage, per cent.
Total dry matter	...	91.1	...	27.0
Albuminoids	...	20.47	...	5.75
Fat	...	1.91	...	1.3
Carbohydrates	...	34.27	...	8.85
Fibre	...	26.07	...	8.01
Ash	...	8.38	...	3.09
Moisture...	...	8.9	...	73.0

Cheaper Meat and Milk Production.

It is possible there may be readers who do not fully comprehend the full significance of the above analysis. In actual practice, though, for several years I have produced winter milk and beef, with rations composed of similar foods to above, fed with cereals and other home-grown foods and using less than half the usual amount of feeding cakes.

In the case of sheep I have fattened tegs on a diet consisting solely of hay made from sainfoin, lucerne, along with rales and cracked barley, without any purchased cake at all.

The importance of growing a large supply of home-grown albuminoids will be more fully realised when it is remembered that the average farmer's annual cake bill is invariably double his rent.

It is not to be assumed that the rotation given, and even the types of crops mentioned, will suit in all cases. On this point I could not do better than quote from the article by Sir Daniel Hall previously referred to. Sir Daniel writes: "We have no space for the many details which Mr. Wibberley gives in his Papers, nor do we hold any brief for his particular rotations, which every farmer could modify for himself, especially when the climate makes it desirable to house the cattle for a longer period than is necessary in Ireland. Silage and more roots will meet this difficulty at the cost, of course, of more labour.

" But what we are convinced of is that Mr Wibberley's " system does show the way to a method of utilising the " land more intensively for the production of meat and milk,
" and of carrying on arable farming at a profit in districts
" where the rainfall or the character of the land has brought
" most of the land down to grass.

" Intensive farming demands the use of the plough. Not " only does the soil yield more plant food under cultivation,
" but crops which are more effective utilisers of that plant
" food replaces the natural grasses, so that total production " of the land is enhanced in two directions. Arable farming
" has, however, been mainly looked at from the point of " view of corn. Mr. Wibberley's system diverts it to fodder, " where the climate renders corn growing a doubtful specu" lation, but is correspondingly favourable to the growth " of green crops. We put forward the system as a step " towards the solution of the problem of the reconciliation
" of the necessity for more intensive farming, and a higher " production from the land, with the opinion that so many " farmers hold as to the prime importance of live-stock in " British farming, and the greater returns to be derived " from meat and milk than from corn. We can agree to " that, and yet not consent to see the British Islands sink " down to grass. Men as well as cattle are wanted on the " land, and plough land of any kind paves the way to " vegetable growing, and numerous other ways of utilising
" the soil intensively, which are lost sight of when the " grazier is in sole command."

In submitting this Paper to such an important body of agriculturalists as The Surveyors' Institution, I should like to place on public record my sincere appreciation of the very valuable help and encouragement given to me, both in the early days of my investigations and, in fact, throughout my adult career, by that great statesman and foremost amongst agricultural thinkers, Sir Horace Plunkett,

A DISCUSSION took place on The Future of British Agriculture.

Mr. HARRY GERMAN (Fellow), in proposing a hearty vote of thanks to the author, said that whether they agreed with it or not, the Paper would set all agriculturists thinking.

He might claim, perhaps, a little of the knowledge that the author thought had been wanting for a good many years. In his younger days he had farmed in an extensive way on behalf of the executors of his late father, and had kept a very large stock of pedigree sheep. Every year in order to feed those sheep for the Royal and other shows he had had to do a great amount of the continuous cropping advocated by the author.

Professor Wibberley had remarked that England, Scotland and Wales were the best countries in the world for cattle rearing. He (the speaker) did not give way to any man in his admiration for those countries as cattle-rearing countries, but after visiting Argentine he was very doubtful whether that country was not a better cattle-rearing country, owing to its mild climate in winter, than Great Britain. He had seen there 500 beasts in two fields which had been out all through the winter, and on congratulating the owner on their appearance, he had been met with the reply "Stay two more days and I will show you others that will put these to shame." He had asked "What have you been giving them all the winter?" and the reply had been "Nothing but grass." At no Christmas market in England would there be found so many cattle as good as those he had seen on his visit to the Argentine—cattle which had had nothing to eat but grass throughout the whole of the winter.

The Paper was headed "The Future of British Agriculture," and he admitted there was a good deal in what the author said with regard to certain classes of land. But unless cereal growing in this country could be made profitable, there was no future for agriculture here. Under the conditions in which agriculturists farmed in this country, with the markets they had, and with the foreign competition they had to meet from all over the world, it was impossible for them to rely entirely on stock farming. To his mind the effect of letting cereal cultivation go clean away would be to destroy every other kind of farming practice in the country. From his own knowledge of farming land in many counties in England, and a little in Wales, he could say that it was impossible to go in for a system of continuous cropping on the greater part of the present arable land. He had had some experience during the last ten years of farming between 1,000 and 2,000 acres of land in the county of Essex: He had gone on to that land one day in the spring when it had been too wet to put horses on to it in a single row, much less tractors; and he had gone on to it three days later when the plough would not face it, it was too hard. He ventured to say that on land of that character it would be impossible to have a course of continuous cropping throughout the year. Where he lived at present, in Nottinghamshire, there was a stretch of sand land running from Nottingham to Doncaster, 45 miles long and 20 miles broad. He had found there, that unless he had had a preparation of four or five years, it was impossible for him to grow a continuous crop in the manner in which the author advocated.

With regard to lucerne, he agreed that hundreds of farmers in the south had grown lucerne in the most efficient manner, and had made a great success of it; but he did venture to say that, north of the Trent, one would be a very lucky man if one succeeded in getting a good crop of lucerne once in six times.

Professor WIBBERLEY: Every time practically, in Northumberland.

Mr. GERMAN: I am only expressing the opinion of a man who was born into farming, and who has been in the industry all his life.

Continuing, Mr. German said that the author contended that by continuous cropping more milk and beef would be produced. He was chairman of the Negotiating Committee of the National Farmers' Milk Committee, and did not want to see any more milk in this country unless a better outlet could be found for it, and unless something could be done to prevent the import of machine-skimmed milk. With regard to beef, he had read with very great interest the arguments that had taken place in the Times between Sir William Haldane and Sir Edmund Vestey. It was part of his business in connection with the National Farmers' Union as chairman of the Live-Stock Committee to keep herself acquainted with the live-stock position in this country, and he was hoping and praying that Sir William Haldane was right; but he was doubtful. Whilst at the present time there was a fairly good demand for their best beef, and, whilst that demand might last for a year or two, he was doubtful if it was a safe one on which to put all one's cards. There was one country which neither Sir William Haldane nor Professor Wibberley had mentioned in regard to beef production, namely, Brazil. He ventured to say that it did not matter, for what farmers got a good price in this country agriculturally, very soon the foreigners with their better climate would try to take the market and bring down the price to a low level. Therefore, whilst not discouraging the production of beef, providing the cost was not too much, he thought that very careful note should be taken of what Sir Edmund Vestey had said.

He would not criticise the most able figures put forward by the author, because they were all correct. Nor would he criticise the author's summing-up with regard to continuous crops and how they should be dealt with, because he admitted at once that Professor Wibberley knew a great deal more about that than he himself did. All he had to say in conclusion was that, bearing in mind the fact that all the main costs (especially labour) were very high at the present time, he did not feel as sanguine as the author did that the remedy for all the ills of agriculture lay in continuous cropping. It was his own belief that the welfare of the agricultural industry in this country lay in an evenly balanced policy, the main part of which was cereal growing. If cereal growing could be made prosperous, even to the extent of paying its way and showing a very little profit, then, in his opinion, the other branches of the industry would become equally successful.

He was sure everyone present would agree that the author was to be congratulated on the manner in which he had put forward the subject before The Institution. He was certain that many present would look into the matter, and consider it in order to see whether they could not get from it something to help them in the difficulty of cultivating the land of this country at the present moment.

Mr. ROBERT COBB (Fellow), in seconding the vote of thanks, said that he had found the Paper a difficult one on which to say anything with regard to the future of British agriculture, because he regarded it as being somewhat more limited in scope, namely, how to increase forage for cattle; and he did not think that the future of British agriculture quite depended on that. There was an old saying that man could not live by bread alone, nor could he live by beef alone either; he must have a little bread with his beef.

The author's panacea for the future of British agriculture was "continuous cropping." His own was "Up with prices and down with the foreigner." The author's theory was a little difficult to apply in practice to many parts of England. Surely, for instance, he did not mean to suggest that all the pastures of the west of England should be ploughed up and "continuous cropping" adopted there. In Kent he guaranteed that there were some heavy soils on which the author could not grow one crop per annum, much less two. Why should Kent be asked to give up their market garden land and their fruit land to "continuous cropping"? If they adopted the author's idea entirely, they would be putting all their eggs into one basket, and sooner or later they would have over-production, as in the case of milk.

Then there was the question of capital. Silos cost money, and at present landlords were unwilling and tenants unable to put up capital for the construction of silos.

He was certain the author was right in what he had said as to the American consumption of beef, and that there was to-day a world shortage of that commodity. Therefore the author's system for the moment undoubtedly was a good one; but to shut out all other methods of cultivation and to adopt "continuous cropping" was not a safe policy for the future of British agriculture.

The author advocated the sowing of sainfoin in tares. His own idea of tares was that it was a lazy way of cleaning the land. He had been brought up to believe that if one wanted to kill any weeds one should put in tares to smother the weeds, but he could not conceive how the tares could know the difference between couch and sainfoin and kill the couch but not the sainfoin. Then, again, the author said that 3 or 4 tons of vetch hay could be grown per acre cheaper than 1 ton of cake. He did not dispute the cost, but he did doubt whether the tonnage could be grown, on an average, on all the farms of England. He agreed with Sir Daniel Hall in what he said about Professor Wibberley's idea, namely, that it was a step towards intensive farming; but it could not be described as a cure for all the ills of British agriculture. One could not get away from the old cry of "Corn and horn." There was a very interesting book called The Bread of Britain, by Mr. Hurst, which was one of the best articles he had read on the world wheat position to-day. Mr. Hurst pointed out the difference there was to-day in growing and selling wheat compared with fifty years ago, and said that whether a man be a Free Trader or a Protectionist he must be driven to the conclusion that the great thing Great Britain wanted to-day, and what she had not got, was fair trade.

One feature in connection with the future of British agriculture which had been put into practice in many ways was that of the national mark, which had already had a great effect in England on prices and on the demand for English-grown produce. If the public could be educated to support the national mark a very great deal would be done. It was no good talking to the general public about "continuous cropping," because they did not know what it meant, but if one talked to them about the national mark, and made them buy English produce, it was going to have a great influence on British agriculture.

The cry of increased prices of food was to his mind an absolute shibboleth. The price of bread to-day had gone up a halfpenny on the quartern loaf, but a reasonable duty on corn would be nothing as compared with that halfpenny. There was no great outcry against the extra halfpenny on the quartern loaf. Why, therefore, should there be an outcry on a protective duty on a quarter of grain?

The ideas and enthusiasm of "pioneers" or "cranks"

(the Professor's own words) were needed. Pioneers were wanted not only in the matter of how to grow crops, but in how to market them and in how to finance them. He hoped that Professor Wibberley would long be spared to carry on his work of pioneering in the agricultural industry.

Captain E. T. MORRIS (Visitor), President of the National Farmers' Union, said he was not at all certain that the mover and seconder of the vote of thanks had not carried the author's idea further than even he had intended. He did not imagine that Professor Wibberley suggested, for instance, that in the West where grass land was a paying proposition, it should be ploughed up for continuous cropping. Neither would Professor Wibberley suggest that any profitable system should be scrapped in favour of continuous cropping.

He would like the author to say what amount of labour was involved in continuous cropping, what was the expenditure involved per acre as regarded ordinary mixed arable farming, and also what position would many thousands of acres of the strong heavy land in the eastern counties have been in under continuous cropping during the last summer? The author had talked about ploughing 8 to 10 acres a day with a three or four-furrow tractor plough; but where was the tractor that would do that on the class of land he had just referred to, and how would the tractor be got off that land when there came a wet day?

All these things must be taken to be practicable remedies within certain limits and as subjects for deep thought and reflection.

He agreed entirely with the author as to the value of lucerne. Personally he had put down a considerable acreage to that plant. He had one field of 47 acres. He remembered well that two years ago in the wet summer, when he had been hoping to get several stacks of hay of great food value, cutting it early for that purpose, the whole of that hay had been poor. In his opinion there was nothing which spoiled so quickly in a wet season as lucerne hay.

Although the author had put forward this matter in the interests of agriculture, there was still left the national issue. He did not believe that the author's method could possibly be adopted, generally speaking, throughout the country in the interests of the producer, and certainly not in the national interests, because the different types of land in the country required a varied system of treatment as the basis of national well-being in cereal production. The intensive competition with which farmers of this country were faced was not in the matter of stock cattle but in the matter of wheat. The foreigners were trying to get a market for their wheat. Therefore, although the suggestion of the author could undoubtedly benefit many farmers in this country, it could never be a successful foundation for the future prosperity of agriculture as a whole, either from the farmer's point of view, or, what was far more important, that of the national well-being.

Mr. M. D. BANNISTER (Fellow) said he came from Sussex, where the people were "obstinate and slow." His first experience of the author's method had been on a farm on which he had made the valuations each Christmas. He had been told by his client that Professor Wibberley was coming down to go in for continuous cropping, and he admitted that at the time he thought they had got hold of a "crank," and that the farm would get into an awful mess. That state of mind had continued for some years until it had gradually began to sink into his brain that Professor Wibberley was on the right track. It was a bad farm with a lot of heavy land, but continuous cropping had done it an enormous amount of good. A good pedigree herd was kept on the farm, and it was thriving well on it. The stockman had been against it, saying that it was going to spoil all his cattle, but in the end he had been convinced otherwise. If the critics of the idea would only try it they would find there was something in it.

It seemed to be Mr. German's idea that Professor Wibberley's suggestion was to do nothing except to grow forage crops over the whole country. He was sure there was nothing further from the author's mind. Mr. German seemed to pin his faith to wheat. Captain Morris had said that everybody in the world was trying to find a market for wheat. If that was so, why persevere with cereals more than they must? After all, their home-killed meat did get preference in price, and it was the one thing that could not be imported now. He did urge those who were farming land to try out Professor Wibberley's scheme. He did not say it would make their fortunes; it might not keep them out of the bankruptcy court; but it would not get them into the bankruptcy court quite as quickly as many other things would.

Mr. T. J. YOUNG (Fellow) remarked that he would like to say a few words from the point of view of one who for a good many years had been struggling to carry the system of continuous cropping into effect. Before doing so he desired to draw attention to a misprint on page 217, where it was said that the first stave silo was put up in 1910. That should be 1901.

The construction of the silo was a most important point. After the bad years of the late 70's and early 80's, when everybody was at their wits' end as to what to do, ensilage was supposed to be the great remedy, but no one had any technical knowledge or experience of it. Farmers who tried it started to make use of every bit of available material they could get hold of. There was nobody to tell them what sort of crops to grow, or how to construct a silo. But silo construction in its main principles was a simple matter. The chief point was to obtain evenness of sinkage. Any type of silo, from one the size of a large barrel to a full installation, was a simple matter so long as one avoided corners and other places where the stuff would waste, and the material was properly cut into small enough pieces and carefully trodden down. If care was taken in those matters, anyone, who could afford to build a silo, could make silage. The growing of the crops, too, was not difficult; in fact he thought the great usefulness of the silo lay in those high-lying places where roots could not be grown, but where the simpler "seed" mixtures such as oats and tares or clovers and ryegrass were possible. .

In the early days all sorts of stuff was put into the silo. He recollected to have heard of one man putting in a dilapidated bowler hat, and also a blue silk Sunday-school banner which had got past the stage of telling people to "search the Scriptures."

He had been struggling with continuous cropping on different soils for some years, and he was trying to take an unbiassed view of the situation. He thought that nearly every farm in the country could do it in a small way, but in a small way only. It was a matter of recent history now that about the year 1921 one of the strong advocates of continuous cropping in this country had money put at his disposal in order to carry out the system in a large way, and it had been a failure. Unless it could be kept within limits, unless the costs could be kept down, and unless it could be dealt with economically (or, in other words, close to the buildings or otherwise convenient), trouble might ensue.

It had also been suggested in the past that continuous cropping was one way of cleaning land. Unfortunately he had had to follow others who had practised it, and he knew what difficulty he had had in cleaning the land. If the land was thoroughly clean, it would perhaps assist in keeping down the weeds, but he did not think there was anything except the old cultivations, the principles of which were known in the time of Adam, which would really clean the land.

With regard to beef, he believed the author's figures were correct, but the fact remained that the supply seemed, at present, to meet the demand, and the result was with the best beef now fetching £3 per live cwt., and second or third quality 50s. to 40s., that the farmer was no better off.

There never had been any one patent way of improving farming, but suggestions like those which the author had put forward that evening were of great help in aiding the farmer to put himself on the right lines in this branch and in assisting him to make a little profit instead of a loss on that side of the varied business of farming. The Paper was headed "The Future of British Agriculture," but personally he thought that, if things did not alter, there was no future for it at all. In the old days when a farmer's difficulties were perhaps just as great, if he got hold of a hundred pounds it lasted him for a good while; nowadays, however, a few pay days passed and there was but little left.

Mr. G. H. JAMES (Visitor) stated that he had been pleased with Mr. German's and Captain Morris's remarks inasmuch as he thought it would be a mistake if it went forth from such an important gathering as the present that the future of British agriculture lay in continuous cropping. The real note had been struck by Mr. German, as amplified by Captain Morris, namely, that supply in cereal form was the only salvation of the agriculture of any country. It should be brought home to the mind of everyone in this country that their salvation lay in, as far as possible, an assured supply of home-grown cereals.

It had been mentioned that evening that presently there would be a world shortage of beef. He thought it was quite possible that the able remarks of the author would assist in a greater production of home-grown meat. He was sure they would assist in a greater production of home-grown milk. But before they could assist the farmer, there must be an outlet of some sort, and at such a price as would warrant a re-population of the countryside.

If by means of better breeding, or continuous cropping, or anything of the sort, the re-population of the countryside could be assisted, then it would be a work of the very greatest importance. But the enormous masses of the urban population should know that until they could give the producers of food a fair deal, and a fair price for their products, it was no good even discussing continuous cropping.

Mr. J. A. E. TRENCHARD (Professional Associate) said he felt he ought not to speak at all, having only just been introduced as a new member, but his excuse was that he had studied agriculture for the twelve years, and that he had worked on farms all over the world.

The speakers in the discussion had given valuable information, but in his opinion it was impossible to generalise. The Senior Member had said something about heavy clay soils, and the thought had come into his mind as to whether it would not be possible to employ Professor Wibberley's system in putting in, in the autumn, a crop which would keep that heavy soil open in the spring, getting more warmth into it, and so activate those friends of the agriculturist—the soil bacteria. Their need was warmth and humidity, and he felt the truth of Professor Wibberley's assertion that those conditions combined with proper rotational cropping were necessary to keep the bacteria active. Therefore their soils, especially their heavy soils, must be kept sufficiently open and dry in the early months of the year so that the bacteria might be able to start working earlier. Then there would be a greater supply of nitrogen, and the farmer would have more of what he needed to produce with nitrogen, which everyone agreed they ought to have.

Many farmers had told him that they were going to the wall. He knew that a lot of their money was in the hands of the cake merchants. He knew that farms were changing hands. He wondered whether it would be possible to organise a scheme whereby those farms which were passing out of the hands of the fine old type of farmer—the men who knew—could pass into the hands of others who also knew what farming meant, and not into the hands of those who wanted an easy time and who starved or injured the soil, so that it took the succeeding man two years or more to get it right again. If such a scheme could be evolved, it would save the agricultural industry of this country.

The PRESIDENT, in putting the vote of thanks to the meeting, referred to Pliny's question: "Why does the husbandman look up to the stars of which he is ignorant while every hedge and tree point out the season?" The Royal Meteorological Society were pleading for more observers with regard to the times and seasons in the country: and with much the same thought in mind the Ministry of Agriculture were seeking to build up, partly by observation of certain flora and fauna, and partly by meteorological data, a knowledge that should be of benefit to agriculture by affording the farmer an indication of the best times to sow seed and carry out other operations. It had been recently discovered that oats sown when the purple plum began to flower yielded well and were free from attack by the frit fly, a disease much feared by growers. The Royal Meteorological Society pleaded for further systematic observation, and particularly in the West of Ireland, North-West of Scotland, and South Wales.

One of the speakers had said that it was not to be thought that Professor Wibberley's Paper was meant to solve the whole problem of the future of English agriculture, and that there was always an opportunity for additional scientific knowledge and investigation. He thought the avenue he had referred to was one which might with advantage be further explored.

The members were very much indebted to Professor Wibberley for his Paper, which had stimulated an interesting and invaluable discussion.

The vote of thanks was carried unanimously.

Professor WIBBERLEY, in acknowledging the vote, thanked the members for the kind way in which they had listened to his Paper. His whole argument was that a greater amount of forage cropping could be carried out with great advantage to the live-stock industry.

With regard to the matter of growing roots in Essex and in other heavy land places, many of the arguments which had been advanced that night were very similar to those which had been advanced when Lord Townsend had introduced roots, namely, that it could not be done. That was the general attitude of agriculturists in many cases. Lord Townsend, when he introduced the matter, had never thought to grow roots on top of Snowdon, but to grow them where they could be grown; and in spite of all the thousands of arguments against his idea, and in spite of the fact that he was called "Turnip Townsend," nevertheless the roots did spread over the country. Similarly he (Professor Wibberley) hoped that, wherever suitable, forage cropping would spread over the country. There were many places where forage crops could be grown with advantage, though he did not say that the heavy land of Essex was among them. He knew the heavy land of Essex, and he should never have the moral courage to do anything at all with such heavy clay except that which it was natural and sensible to do, namely, to get some good indigenous grasses, put the land down to grass and get the best possible crop out of it. He did not believe any system of arable farming at the present time, with prices as they were, could be made to pay on heavy clay soil, but over a very large portion of the south-west of England, up to the Midlands, even all round Nottingham, Norfolk and the Eastern Counties, there were many acres of land where the system suggested in the Paper had been put into operation.

Brazil had been mentioned. Brazil had been boomed as a country of great possibilities for the increase of live-stock. It might be so, but nevertheless it was a fact that the live-stock population of Brazil had declined during the last two or three years.

As regards pastures, there was one feature of great importance of which few people were aware. There were thousands of farmers in the country who would like to get more land down to grass, or, at least, to lengthen the rotations, but they did not know that within the last few years indigenous deep-rooting grasses and clovers which made that possible had been put on the market.

Having studied the question from all standpoints, he was not, as regards wheat and corn growing, in favour of foreign wheat being brought into this country. There was no man who would more like to see some system started in this country whereby the wheat and corn areas could be increased. One writer had referred to the fact that it would only mean an increase of about a halfpenny on the 4lb. loaf to put a 10s. duty on imported wheat, and to distribute it amongst the home farmers. That was fact. However, he had come to the meeting not to speak on political questions, but on the position of farming to-day. As a man who had done a considerable amount of work in scientific research and practical farming, he had been brought up in a school where the first essential was to stick to facts, and he had been trying to deal with the facts as they had presented themselves to him as regarded the agricultural position. What the future might hold, politically or otherwise, he did not know; all that he was trying to emphasise was the fact that there was a great possibility of an immense future development in every type of live-stock in this country. The decrease in the size of the average family, for example, had created a demand for smaller joints. If farmers produced nicer and smaller weighted joints all round, they would have practically a monopoly of the home markets, because in that commodity the Argentine could not compete with them.

A DISCUSSION took place on

The Housing (No. 2) Bill.

Mr. D. M. LAWRENCE (Professional Associate) said he understood his task in opening the discussion was not so much to criticise the Bill as to give some account of its provisions and of the main changes which it sought to effect. He would try, therefore, merely to summarise what he conceived to be its main features.

One could not help feeling sometimes that legislation in this country on any important subject was fated to pass through three phases. In the first phase one had a series of Acts passed extending over a number of years, each one effecting some important repeal or amendment in those which had gone before. In the second phase Parliament, in a sudden passion for orderliness, gathered all those Acts under one consolidating statute; and in the third phase the consolidating statute was once more resolved into its original elements by a further series of amendments and repeals. They had seen that process in operation in connection with income tax and the law of property. It was now the turn of housing.

The Housing Act of 1925 consolidated, at any rate, the bulk of the law relating to housing. The Bill under discussion that night—the Housing (No. 2) Bill—proposed to repeal large portions of the 1925 Act, and to effect substantial amendments to it. It would be read as one with the 1925 Act, which was referred to in the Bill as “the principal Act,” and it was proposed that the two should be cited together as the Housing Acts, 1925–30.

The Bill was divided into five parts, of which Parts I. and II. were likely to be of principal interest to members of The Institution. He therefore proposed to devote his time to those two parts, and to certain general provisions in Part V., which had to be read in conjunction with them.

Part I. dealt with the clearance or improvement of unhealthy areas. It was intended to replace those sections of Part II. of the Housing Act, 1925, dealing with improvement and reconstruction schemes. Most of those sections were proposed to be repealed. In place of the improvement and reconstruction scheme, with which one had become familiar under the 1925 Act, the Bill introduced what it described as clearance areas and improvement areas. A clearance area was an unhealthy area which the local authority considered could only be dealt with effectively by the demolition of all existing buildings. An improvement area, on the other hand, was again an unhealthy area, but one which the local authority considered could be effectively dealt with without the demolition of all existing buildings.

Taking, first of all, the case of the clearance area: when a local authority passed a resolution to the effect that a certain area was a clearance area, it would be empowered under the Bill to proceed by two methods, or by a combination of two methods. One was to call upon the owners to demolish the buildings. This would be effected by means of a clearance order and would not involve compulsory acquisition of land. The other method would be for the local authority to acquire the land in the area, or portions of it, and itself demolish the buildings, or secure their demolition. That would be effected either by purchasing the land by agreement or by means of a compulsory purchase order.

Where a local authority proposed to proceed by means of a clearance order, the order would have to be confirmed by the Minister of Health; an opportunity must be given for making objections; and the Minister must hold a local enquiry before confirming it. When the clearance order was confirmed, owners would be required to demolish their buildings within a certain given period. If they failed to do so, the local authority would have power to enter on the land, demolish the buildings, and sell the old materials. If any loss was incurred, the local authority might recover it from the owner or owners concerned. If any surplus remained from the sale of the old materials, it was to be paid to the owner or such one or more of the owners as the local authority thought fit.

In that connection it might be useful to refer to the definition of "owner" in Clause 53 of the Bill, Subclause (1):—

"The expression 'owner' in relation to any building means a person, other than a mortgagee not in possession, who is for the time being entitled to dispose of the fee simple of the building, whether in possession or in reversion, and includes also a person holding or entitled to the rents and profits of the building under a lease or agreement the unexpired term whereof exceeds three years."

So that in the not unlikely event of a freeholder and a lessee for a greater term than three years being interested in a particular building subject to the clearance order, it appeared that a local authority might apportion any expense arising from the demolition or any surplus resulting from the sale of old materials amongst the parties as it thought fit.

As regarded any occupier of property affected by a clearance order, Clause 34 of the Bill enabled the local authority to pay such occupier compensation for the cost of the removal and the trade disturbance as it thought fit.

Where the local authority proposed to deal with the clearance area by purchasing land and itself demolishing the buildings, or securing their demolition, it would also be authorised to purchase not only land in the clearance area itself but also adjoining land which might be required for the purpose of securing an area of suitable shape or size, or for the effective user or development of the area when cleared. That additional land would seem to correspond to the blue area of an improvement and reconstruction scheme, the land in the clearance area itself corresponding with the red area of such a scheme.

If the local authority could not acquire the land which it wanted by agreement, it might resort to a compulsory purchase order which, like a clearance order, required confirmation by the Ministry, and might be made the subject of objections and the holding of a local enquiry.

The basis of compensation for land in the clearance area itself would continue to be governed by Section 46 of the Housing Act, 1925. The basis, therefore, would be the site value less a reduction fraction. Whatever objections there might have been to the use of that basis under the 1925 Act would seem to apply equally to its application under the Bill. There was the same danger of hardship to lessees; compensation would still vary according to the use to which the local authority proposed to put the cleared site, and he could not personally see anything in the Bill to guard against the hardship which very often resulted when comparatively sound and sanitary property was included in a condemned area on account of environment.

Occupiers of trade premises might possibly find some modification of the judgment in Northwood v. the London County Council in Clause 34 of the Bill, which gave the local authority power to make an allowance for cost of removal and for trade disturbance to the occupiers in such cases. It should be noticed particularly, however, that that allowance was entirely at the discretion of the local authority and could not be claimed by the occupier as a matter of right.

With regard to the reduction fraction, there was one point which might possibly be worthy of notice. Under the 1925 Act the reduction fraction was calculated by reference to the site value of the whole of the land included in an improvement and reconstruction scheme, both the red lands and the blue lands. Under the slightly amended wording of Section 46, which was introduced in the Third Schedule to the Bill, the reduction fraction would be ascertained by reference solely to the value of the land in the clearance area; in other words, solely in reference to the value of the red land. No doubt the effect of that would vary in each case according to circumstances and the provisions of the particular scheme, but he thought on the whole it would tend to be to the disadvantage of owners.

There also appeared to be rather a curious anomaly when one compared the position of a person served with a clearance order under that part of the Act with that of a person served with a compulsory purchase order. Assuming the case of two owners in the same clearance area—if the one owner was served with a clearance order he apparently lost his buildings, but, on the other hand, he retained his site and he got the value, if any, of his old materials. The owner served with a compulsory purchase order, on the other hand, got nothing for his buildings, nothing for his old materials, and compensation for the value of his site was reduced by a reduction fraction.

With regard to land outside the clearance area which was acquired by the local authority under that part of the Act, corresponding no doubt to the blue land of an improvement and reconstruction scheme, the basis of compensation was to be the same as that which applied at the present day to blue-area land. The matter was governed by Part II. of the Third Schedule to the Bill, which, for all practical purposes, was the same as Part 2 of the First Schedule of the 1925 Act.

Passing to the question of improvement areas which the local authority considered could be dealt with effectively without a demolition of all existing buildings—when a local authority passed a resolution to the effect that an area was an improvement area, it would be able under the Bill to deal with the area by three methods which could be applied simultaneously. First of all, as regarded any individual dwelling-houses which might be unfit for human habitation, the local authority would be able to proceed by means of notices to repair and demolition orders under Part 2 of the Bill. Secondly, overcrowding or other unhealthy conditions in the area might be dealt with by bye-laws under Sections 6 and 7 of the 1925 Act. Thirdly, with regard to any land in the area which the local authority wished to acquire for the purpose of opening up the area, that might be acquired either by agreement or by means of a compulsory purchase order.

The basis of compensation in the case of land in an improvement area was the same as that which applied at the present day to the blue-area land of an improvement and reconstruction scheme.

Part II. of the Bill dealt with the repair or demolition of insanitary houses. It was intended to replace those sections of Part I. of the 1925 Act, dealing with notices to repair, closing and demolition orders, and the removal of obstructive buildings.

Two distinct types of cases were provided for here. First of all there was the dwelling-house which was unfit for human habitation, but which the local authority considered could be rendered fit at a reasonable expense. That was to be dealt with by means of notices to repair. Secondly, there was the dwelling-house unfit for human habitation which could not be rendered fit at a reasonable expense. That was to be dealt with by means of demolition orders. Whether or not a house could be rendered fit at a reasonable expense was to be judged by reference to the cost of the necessary work and the estimated value of the house when the work was completed.

Notices to repair insanitary houses were provided for in Clauses 14, 15 and 20 of the Bill. Briefly, the procedure was that if a house was unfit for human habitation but could be rendered fit at a reasonable cost, the local authority might serve a notice on the person having control of the premises and require him to execute the necessary work. In default the local authority entered on the property, carried out the necessary work, and recovered the cost as a charge on the property. If a notice to repair was appealed against and it was decided that the house could not be made fit for human habitation at a reasonable cost, it was proposed that the local authority should be entitled to acquire the property either by agreement or by means of a compulsory purchase order. The basis of compensation in such a case was to be the value of the property as a site cleared of buildings and available for development in accordance with the ordinary building bye-laws in force in the district and the provisions of any town-planning scheme applying to the area. Any occupier of the premises might, at the discretion of the local authority, be given an allowance for cost of removal or for trade disturbance under Clause 34.

Those provisions of the Bill appeared substantially the same as those of Sections 3 and 4 of the 1925 Act. There was, however, rather an important change as regards liability for the cost of the work. Under the Bill notice to repair had to be served in the first instance on the person having control of the premises. That was defined in Clause 14, Sub-clause (2), of the Act as the person who received the rack-rent of the houses, whether on his own account or as agent or as trustee for any other person, or who would so receive it if the house were let at a rack-rent. That, of course, was substantially the definition of "owner" which one got in the Public Health Acts and the Housing Act of 1925—a definition which in the past, in that connection, had sometimes caused extreme hardship, notably in the case of Watts v. The Battersea Borough Council, where a solicitor collecting rents on behalf of an estate was held personally liable for repairs costing about £700. In the Bill, however, it was provided in Clause 15, Sub-clause (2), that if the party served with the notice was collecting rents on behalf of some other person, then in that case his liability was limited to the amount of money which he had received on behalf of that party as agent or trustee since the date when the notice was served. That clause seemed to go a little way, at any rate, towards meeting the recommendation which was made in January last to the Ministry of Health by The Institution and some other interested bodies.

The question of demolition orders was covered by Clauses 16 and 18 of the Bill. Briefly, if a dwelling-house was unfit for human habitation and, in the opinion of the Ministry, could not be rendered fit at a reasonable cost, then unless any owner or mortgagee undertook to carry out the necessary works, or not to use the premises as a human habitation until they had been made fit for that purpose, the local authority would be entitled to serve a demolition order. If the demolition order was not complied with within a reasonable time, the local authority would then enter on the premises, demolish the buildings, and sell the old materials. As in the case of a clearance order, if any loss was involved in this process it might be recovered from the owner or owners, or if any surplus resulted from the sale of the old materials it was payable to the owner or such one or more of the owners as the local authority thought fit. Where it was desired to deal with only a portion of premises, the procedure would be by closing order instead of by demolition order.

There did not seem to be a very great distinction between those provisions of the Act and those of the 1925 Act, except that under the 1925 Act a closing order was served first, followed at an interval of about three months by a demolition order. Under the Bill apparently the demolition order would be served at once. Clause 33 made full provision for obtaining possession of premises which were the subject of the demolition order, and under Clause 34 the local authority could at its discretion pay compensation for trade disturbance or cost of removal to the occupiers of the premises.

Clause 19 in Part II. of the Bill introduced rather an interesting amendment on the question of appeals. Under the 1925 Act appeals against notices to repair, or orders for the recovery of the cost of the work, or closing or demolition orders, went to the Ministry of Health. Under the Bill it was proposed that all those appeals in future should go to the county court, with a right of appeal to the Court of Appeal on any point of law; the decision of the Court of Appeal to be final.

Parts III. and IV. of the Act were concerned mainly with the duties of local authorities in connection with providing housing accommodation in their areas, and also introduced certain financial provisions, which were fully summarised in the financial memorandum to the Act.

Part V. introduced certain miscellaneous clauses, some of which again were summarised in the financial memorandum, and others of which he had touched upon in connection with the procedure under Parts I. and II.

He was afraid it had not been possible, in anything like the reasonable time allowed to an opener, to deal with the clauses of the Act in any detail. He could only hope that the summary of its main points which he had attempted might have cleared the ground for more detailed criticism and discussion by those who were going to follow him.

Mr. C. GERALD EVE (Vice-President) said it gave him great pleasure to propose a vote of thanks to Mr. Lawrance, and to congratulate him on his succinct and lucid summary of the somewhat complicated Bill under discussion.

Members would probably be interested to know what proposals the Council intended to make to the authorities and others by way of amendment to the Bill.

The first point was in connection with Clause 1. If the local authority described or delineated a clearance area as buildings which were insanitary, or in an insanitary area, would buildings which in themselves were sound and sanitary, but situated nevertheless in an alleged insanitary area, get the old "red" compensation, i.e., site value less reduction factor, or would they be left outside the clearance area as "islands," and be treated as "blue" land? The Parliamentary Committee of the Council had come to the conclusion that the Bill was by no means clear on this point.

The ex-Minister of Health, Mr. Neville Chamberlain, had asked the same question on Second Reading, and had said that, as he read Clause 1, it seemed that there was no clear provision for the exclusion from the clearance area of those good "islands." The Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Health, Miss Susan Lawrence, had then explained that Mr. Neville Chamberlain had really misread the Bill, which clearly provided that good property would be left outside the clearance area. The Council considered that what the Parliamentary Secretary had said should be made much clearer in Clause 1, and that it should be made plain that property, good in itself, should be left as "islands" outside the clearance area, and receive ordinary market value. He was sure that would meet with the approval of everyone who had a sense of order and decency in expropriating private property for the good of the public.

He would turn now to the owner who was notified by the local authority that he had to demolish his building. The demolition might result in a profit from the sale of old material, or a loss in pulling down; and the Bill said in effect that the local authority might "screw out" the loss from, or pay the profit to, any owner; and "owner" was defined either as the freeholder or any lessee who had three years unexpired. So that where there was a freeholder and a chain of lessees the local authority might select any one out of those owners to whom to send the bill or a cheque for the profit. The Council thought that it was undesirable that this selection should be left to the whim of the local authority. They therefore suggested that the county court should hear and decide any dispute between the owners inter se, as to which one or more of them should pay the bill or receive the profit as the case might be.

A new point in the Bill was that a local authority, having acquired a site for the purpose of housing, the local authority might nevertheless elect to appropriate it for any purpose for which they were, under the general statutes of the realm, authorised to acquire land. Hitherto it had been the rule that if a landowner had had his property acquired he claimed first for land taken, and, secondly, for injurious affection caused by the future use of the land. If the present Bill purported to empower local authorities to buy land for housing, and afterwards to use it for some other purpose, such as a noisy parking ground, then the Council urged that the vendor should be allowed, if the user were different from, and more injurious than, the purpose of housing, to claim further compensation for injurious affection. That seemed fair. The local authority might say in the first place "We want this for housing," and then the owner might find a fried-fish shop being put up next door to him twelve months or twelve years after the arbitration for compensation had been concluded.

Improvement areas were areas delineated by the local authority as such. Having delineated them, without any notice to the owner except by publication in the local papers (which he thought was quite fair), the local authority could then consider what to do, if anything, to each individual property within that area. The moment they wished to do anything proper, notices were served upon every owner, lessee, mortgagee, and so forth, and if anyone objected, there was the usual power of objection and a local inquiry. But unless the local authority decided to do something to any specific property within that area, they sat, as it were, on the fence. The landowner observed in the local paper that his property was within an improvement area, and he waited for notice as to what was to be done to it. The local authority quite properly said "This large area "is not one for clearance; it is one for individual treatment. We will make bye-laws for the regulation of "these properties; those are bad, we will demolish them;

"these others can be repaired; we will issue notices." They elected what to do, very properly, according to the circumstances of each case. But in the meantime there was a dead hand on the property militating against a sale. Therefore the Council of The Institution suggested that the owner should be able to go to the local authority and say "Do you intend to demolish this property? Do you intend to buy this property?" and if the local authority replied "We do not intend to do either," then the shadow of the dead hand was removed.

With regard to compensation all members would recollect the excellent Presidential Address of Mr. J. D. Wallis, who, with all his experience as official arbitrator behind him, had referred to the extreme hardship which he found had resulted from the "red" compensation—that was, site value less reduction factor. Members would also recollect how The Institution had pointed out, in season and out of season, the iniquity of Section 46 of the Housing Act, 1925. Yet the present Bill repealed Section 46 and deliberately re-enacted in Clause 9 the same principle of compensation. The Council of The Institution proposed to put forward again their past expression of opinion, namely, that market value was the proper basis of compensation for red buildings, for the reason that if, in fact, buildings were disgraceful and were in a bad situation, with insufficient air and altogether horrible or insanitary, what was the market value of the site plus buildings? Site value only. But if the buildings were sound, or nearly so, why should the retired railway guard, who had spent his life's savings in buying a property in order to live in, not get whatever value was left in the buildings, provided they were, in fact, fit for habitation? In other words, market value looked after itself. If there was no market value in buildings there would be no compensation.

The Council of The Institution said that they still adhered to their old ideas on this matter, and urged that, at the very least in the present Bill, the reduction factor should disappear, because no one had yet been found who could give a logical argument in support of it. Why should the purpose, or the method for or in which the purchasers were going to use a site, have any effect on market value? Why should owners get less for their sites if the acquiring authorities were going to re-house or to create open spaces than those owners whose land was not in such a scheme? Therefore the Council now said "Let us at least get the "reduction factor done away with if we cannot get Section 46 abolished."

In conclusion, under Section 45 of the Housing Act, 1925, it was provided that where a local authority acquired sites they could stop up and make to cease all rights-of-way, compensation being paid to all persons or bodies affected by such cesser of the rights-of-way. The present Bill, under Clause 10, separated those rights-of-way into two categories, public and private, and was silent about compensation in cases where the local authority decreed that a public right-of-way was to be stopped. In effect, therefore, it repealed the compensation which was given under Section 45 of the Housing Act, 1925. Compensation, however, was still to be allowed for the stoppage of private rights-of-way.

The Council said that the right of compensation to the landowner for the stoppage of a public right-of-way should continue. They could imagine the case of an owner of land towards the end of a public highway, 5 acres of which was taken and paid for. If, twelve years or twelve months after, the public road were stopped, the owner would find himself deprived of access to his next 5 acres further along without being able to claim a penny of compensation. The Council of The Institution thought it probable that the real effect of Clause 10 had not been realised by the promoters of the Bill.

MR. FRANK HUNT, C.V.O. (Member of Council), said he was glad to be able to second the vote of thanks to Mr. Lawrance, because Mr. Lawrance had given, briefly and concisely, some impressions of what was intended to be embodied in the new Housing Bill.

It was true that much of it appeared to be a repetition of what appeared in the Consolidation Act of 1925, but it was obvious that the present Bill attempted to overcome some of the difficulties which faced authorities trying to make schemes dealing with slum areas by reason of the judgments in the Derby case approved, if one might say so, by the Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal in considering the Liverpool case. One could not help feeling that much of what had taken place both in the Derby case and in the Liverpool case had no direct bearing on the merits of the matter at all. It had really been one manner of making the way of an authority, desiring to deal with insanitary areas, as difficult as possible. The Government had taken a short cut through that difficulty. So-called insanitary areas were now to disappear. If local authorities were satisfied that there were houses unfit for human habitation in their districts (and surely The Institution was not going to say that the occupation of such houses should continue), their homes were to be demolished. Reasons which went to determine whether or not a house was unfit were set out in the Bill. If there was a question whether the local authority were right in having decided that a house was unfit, there was an opportunity given, at the Minister's inquiry, to the owner to say that the house was still fit notwithstanding the condemnation. With regard to that class of property, surely there could be no question. There was a second group of houses or buildings which, by reason of their own bad arrangement, or their bad environment, were injurious or dangerous to the health of their or the adjoining inhabitants and were also properly included within the purview of Clause 1.

The real test here was injury to health. What was sought to be dealt with was the abatement of a public nuisance, and not merely the purchase of property for a public purpose. He thought both Mr. Lawrance and Mr. Gerald Eve had been talking of property, which was sound and sanitary, being included within the condemnation of Clause 1. He suggested that it was a perversion of the words of Clause 1 to say that, by the time the inquiry was finished, any property which was not unfit for human habitation or was not injurious to health could be condemned.

The test was a health test, and it was not the surveyor's evidence, but the medical officer's, which would be final on that subject.

He agreed that in the old procedure, where an area was simply indicated by the medical officer of health as being dangerous or injurious to health, there had been frequently blocks of property which had not of themselves been unhealthy. As the result of enquiry the Minister had been very free in transferring property from the "red" to the "blue" category.

Now, under Clause 1, one could only deal with dangerous property. If one wanted the other land, one had to take it by means of Clause 3. If the Minister, after enquiry, thought that property had been wrongly included in Clause 1, he could exclude it from Clause 1 and add it as property to be purchased under Clause 3. Once it was grasped that that was not an ordinary purchase but was for the abatement of a public nuisance, he thought there could be no difficulty in justifying the reduction factor in Section 46. It had to be remembered that the first purpose of Section 9 of the 1919 Act, which later became Section 46 of the 1925 Act, was to give, in respect to property properly coloured red in a condemned area, merely housing site value; but as there had always been blue property within the area, some provision had had to be made to spread the notion of housing site value over the whole of the area to be used for housing. He very well remembered the months which had been spent in trying to devise the formula. It had pleased nobody; but it had been an honest attempt to spread the notion of housing site value over all the property included in the area. The real reason of that had been that a local authority had been saddled with the obligation to provide new accommodation, somehow or another, for the number of persons displaced, and because housing site value was considered the highest value to the local authority which the site could have when it passed into its possession.

The present Bill was going to simplify the procedure. If it had been possible, without increasing the cost, to have done what he thought the Council of The Institution had recommended, namely, adopt market value as the basis of the price (not necessarily as the price as some had rather suggested), then he thought what were obvious hardships as between differing interests and differing degrees of badness could have been met. The principle of Section 46 really meant that the very worst properties got just as much money as the little less than good. No doubt the manner of apportionment laid down in the Colebrook case had worked hardship. The Court had decided that the right way was to apportion on the value of the respective interests in the site. He would have preferred the Court to apportion on the market basis of the various interests in the property. The compensation would have been distributed in a different way, the lessee would have got something, the freeholder less. That point had always been difficult to most surveyors; he knew it had been so to official arbitrators, because it looked as if there was a very gross unfairness in the distribution under Section 46 and its working as between different degrees of badness of property.

There was a third point which Mr. Lawrance had dealt with, namely, the decision in the Northwood case. It was a decision with which he personally had never agreed. It was to the effect that the owner of an interest in a red property was not entitled to compensation for trade disturbance. Up to the present moment he had never yet been able to find that a trader was in law debarred from recovering compensation except by reason of the judgment in the Northwood case. It was unfortunate that that case should have been argued before the Court as a licensed house case. The Lord Chief Justice had tried to get counsel who had been arguing the case back on to the real merits of it, but counsel had preferred to continue hammering at the idea of the licensed house. Having listened to the whole of the arguments, he (Mr. Hunt) knew that it was a foregone conclusion what the Court's decision would be. For all that, however, he had not seen anything in the Housing Act of 1919 which deprived anybody of trade compensation for loss from expropriation. Nevertheless, while a person was not receiving it now as of right, the local authority were, by the present Bill, empowered to make some payments in respect of the loss sustained on expropriation.

He thought Mr. Lawrance deserved the thanks of The Institution for having introduced the subject at so appropriate a time.

Mr. CUTHBERT LAKE (Member of Council) said that the compensation provisions had been tersely described by a client of his recently, who had inherited the freehold of an estate which had been taken under Section 46 of the 1925 Act. By way of compensation he as the owner of the freehold ground rent had received 10 per cent. less than the value of his interest. The client had said "Well, I came into it, and it is said to be a slum area; I cannot claim that I have been unduly penalised. But my lessee has got 30 per cent. less than the market value of his interest. That is robbery, and the occupying tenant, who has some three or four years of his term to run, has had about 10 per cent. of what he should have had on market value. That is damnable."

Personally he thought that the new clause should be well understood by more than a few Members of Parliament and a comparatively small percentage of the profession. There would then not be something on the Statute Book which was a disgrace to the country and something like a slur on the surveying profession owing to the fact that they had not brought it home hard enough. Surveyors did not act only for freeholders, but also for those whom the present Government professed to represent and who suffered from the continuation of Section 46, now Clause 9, and he would like it to go forth from The Institution that the small lessee and occupier should not be penalised.

Mr. E. W. MASON (Fellow) said that he had come to bless the Bill, the great merit of which lay in the fact that some amount of re-conditioning was attempted by it. The particular sections to which he wished to draw attention were those which dealt with improvements in connection with insanitary houses. He suggested that the slum problem would never be solved by the creation of clearance areas, and that was, he thought, supported by the Housing Reports of the London County Council, from which could be seen the amount of money which had been spent, and also the result—a loss of half a million a year for London alone. Considering the smallness of the area which had been touched, he thought one must be forced to the conclusion that if the present remedy of clearance areas was proceeded with, the State would go bankrupt.

There were two things which he seriously suggested would assist towards slum clearance, namely, education and bye-laws. He thought the present Bill failed with regard to education, but he thought it would succeed with regard to bye-laws. It did not succeed, in his opinion, on education, because first of all it dealt solely with the matter from the point of view of the local authorities, and did not encourage owners to put their properties into better order. It also failed in education because it still left so much with the Ministry of Health. If the great amount of education which had been produced from the county courts in respect of the Landlord and Tenant Act, which had only been working for two years, was contrasted with that issuing from the work of the Ministry of Health, and all the orders which that Ministry had made during the past ten years, one would see that it all redounded to the credit of the former. No one had any more knowledge now as to what was necessary in order to create a sanitary house, or what it was necessary to do in order to satisfy ordinary requirements, than one had had in 1919.

On the question of bye-laws, he felt that the success would be largely dependent on the administration. He hoped that the bye-laws would be made as stringent as possible, and would cover all the provisions which were necessary for the maintenance and provision of sanitary houses; but even so, they would be useless unless strenuously administered, and he hoped that every member of the public, including landlords, tenants and owners, would be thoroughly educated up as to what was necessary to keep a house in order. By

It was satisfactory to notice that bye-laws were, at any rate for the present, not only to apply to houses let in lodgings, but also to apply to houses let to one family. Personally he would like to see a notice exhibited by legal enactment in every house specifying the maximum number of people permitted to live in the house, including children, and not to make one person responsible, but to make the whole lot—landlord, tenant, sub-tenant, lodger, and every single person collectively and severally liable to fines for infringement. If that were done, every occupier would see to it that there was no overcrowding.

He had become convinced, after reading the Act, that the doctrine of environment had, to a large extent, gone. He agreed with the Council of The Institution that that should be made perfectly clear. In the present Bill reference was made to property which was "surrounded" by a clearance area—quite a different word from that which was in any previous Act. Also, if one turned to Schedule 2, Section 5, Provision 3, one would see that not only was a Minister entitled to include "blue" properties, but that if certain properties had been put in the clearance area which he thought should not have been put in, he might take them out. How it was possible to argue the doctrine of environment on that seemed to him rather difficult.

As regarded objections, he thought that when the local authority was serving the notice at the original stage it should be compulsory upon them to state the grounds on which they condemned the various properties, and that there should be some opportunity given during the proceedings for reasons to be given why the property had subsequently been condemned. He did not want to be obstructive, but he thought there should be an end of the hiding in Whitehall business, and that everything should be above board, so that the public should know why a building was or was not condemned.

There was still no provision for allocation of compensation amongst the various interests. He thought with Mr. Hunt that was grossly unfair to the lessee.

He could not understand how the reduction factor could be justified. Everybody contributed already through the ordinary channels of taxation to the taxes which were used for the purpose of carrying out improvements, and why on earth owners of particular plots should be further mulcted to contribute to a particular housing scheme he could not understand. He thought Mr. Greenwood himself had shown his own attitude was illogical, because in the "Parliamentary Debates" in his opening speech he had said, in dealing with a cleared site on a clearance scheme, "the cleared site remains with the owners and they can do what they like with it. They have been robbed (sic!) of nothing which is worth "anything,"—"and they still have their land. What could "be fairer?" So that Mr. Greenwood admitted that the full site value was the proper compensation, and he asked "What could be fairer?" But in the Bill, if the local authority decided to use the land for some particular purpose—an open space or housing—then the reduction factor was to be applied to the area.

If it was, not as Mr. Greenwood had said, the owner's business what the local authority did with the property, why was that subsequent use brought in beforehand to reduce the compensation which was to be paid to that owner? It was totally illogical, and he thought The Institution should definitely press for that to be remedied.

The allowance to traders was a most grudging admission. The clause did not state the terms on which the compensation should be made, and the provision should be compulsory.

Finally he desired to refer to Schedule 1, Sub-section (5), Schedule 2, Sub-section (6), which said: "and the powers "delegated thereunder to the Minister." He objected to them in his capacity as a citizen as well as a surveyor. He was not prepared to admit the infallibility of Ministers of departments or the right claimed to take the matter entirely outside the protection of the courts of law. It was said that it was to enable housing schemes to proceed. This point put into a sub-section of a schedule at the end of an Act would enable a scheme to be prepared called a housing scheme, and the Minister of Health could alter it as he thought fit and could put what he liked into it, and could confirm it, and no court of law in this country could touch him. That was an infringement of the liberty of the subject which ought not to be allowed in any circumstances whatever. Personally he was not prepared to subscribe to the doctrine of ministerial infallibility.

Captain MONTAGU EVANS (Fellow) said that he desired to associate himself with Mr. Eason in regard to the Bill generally. He did think that some attempt had been made to clear away a few of the previous difficulties.

So far as he saw it, there were four main essential points with regard to slum clearance. Firstly, it could not be divorced from the housing problem; secondly, as much economy as possible should be observed; thirdly, justice should be done to all interested in the property, both owners and tenants; and fourthly, the recurrence of slums must, at all costs, be prevented.

Assuming that these four points had to be considered with regard to slum clearances, it was interesting to see how far the Bill met those difficulties. With regard to the first point, namely, the inter-connection of slum clearance with housing, the Bill did make some attempt to effect that, but he did not think it went far enough. It said that there should be no slum clearance area unless a local authority proved that it could re-house the people before the existing houses were pulled down, but it did not say under what conditions those people were to be re-housed. The Bill did provide for the local authorities erecting houses of a smaller class, and presumably at lower rentals; but there again, he did not think it went far enough. Their powers were permissive only in that respect.

Experience had proved that since the war private enterprise had made a commendable effort to meet the needs of the better-paid class of working man, the clerk, and the person of moderate means. In many cases, however, under the old Housing Acts, houses on municipal estates had been occupied by people of the wrong class altogether. He remembered going round a housing estate and counting twenty-eight cars outside the doors of the houses. He also observed another clause in the Bill, which again was only a half-hearted attempt to deal with the situation. The clause referred to was intended, apparently, as a discouragement to local authorities to sell houses. But why a discouragement? Why not an absolute bar to sell houses? There again the local authorities were being put in competition with private enterprise, which was a bad thing for this country. He had seen in the papers recently a report of a local authority applying to the Minister of Health for permission to sell houses at cost—which in his opinion was a most pernicious procedure.

Turning to his second point, he thought the Bill had made some attempt to effect economies with regard to slum clearance, because it provided for re-conditioning of houses. It was his experience that the question of re-conditioning had hitherto been practically ignored; and it was interesting to note, in that connection, that recently one of America's leading housing experts had said that he was amazed at the wholesale demolition in this country of what he considered perfectly sound property, and had contended that if the structure was sound there was no reason why it should not be made a perfectly sound house as a matter of general principle. The Bill went some way towards recognising this, but its provisions were half-hearted. As Mr. Eason had said, it was within the power, absolutely, of the Minister of Health to say whether a clearance area should be a clearance area, and, so far as he could see, if the Minister of Health said that a certain area was a clearance area, there was nothing in the Bill which was going to prevent perfectly sound houses from being taken at site value or less, because it might be that a perfectly sound and sanitary house was, for instance, in a bad arrangement of streets.

With regard to his third point, The Institution's view was that compensation should be based upon market value: in fact it should be market value. If that method were adopted, there would be no injustice to owners, to tenants, or to the acquiring authority, because they would acquire the property at what it would fetch in the market, and as Mr. Gerald Eve had pointed out, if a property was old, dilapidated and insanitary, then the building on it was worth nothing, and would be valueless. If one acquired property at market value, one also, to a great extent got rid of the difficulty of apportioning values to various interests.

With regard to his last point, namely, the prevention of the recurrence of slums, there he was treading on dangerous ground; but he held the view, and strongly, that slums were created by tenants and not by owners. For years past there had been much supervision of owners, but little of tenants. Personally he suggested that in bye-laws one could see a method by which this serious problem could be tackled. There could be included in bye-laws certain provisions forcing tenants, if possible under penalties, to keep their houses clean and to take care of the property they occupied. Until that was done the slum problem would continue, even if half the property in the country were demolished. They were already seeing the recurrence of slums in property which had been built in comparatively recent years, and he himself knew of actual cases. Until there was some method of regulating the behaviour of tenants in houses the slum problem would not be solved.

Mr. HOLROYD F. CHAMBERS (Member of Council) said that surveyors had long been waiting for the Bill to help them forward with the question of slum clearances, and they were disappointed at the very little help it gave them. They were told by Mr. Greenwood that a Town Planning Bill for built-up areas was being prepared. The whole problem of slum clearance, at least in London, was so completely knit up with the question of the town planning of built-up areas, that the long postponement of that Bill did lead one to fear that the present Minister of Health perhaps did not appreciate the interdependency of the slum question with that of town planning. An almost insuperable difficulty with which local authorities had to contend in London, in regard to the problem, was that of getting central areas in London favourable for building. There was as immense overcrowded population living in those central districts which could not be re-housed in the centre because of the scarcity of land and the very high value of it.

There was one advantage in the Bill, namely, that an additional subsidy was given in those cases when it was found necessary to build in three-storey buildings or on land over £4,000 per acre.

The difficulty was that although a number of persons might be re-housed within those areas, in practically all cases there would be a surplus, which had to live near their work and could not always be re-housed in outlying districts. The tragedy was that there were still more industries pouring down from the North into London, and the efforts towards slum clearance were largely being nullified by these uncontrolled encroachments. The process would continue in the absence of town planning powers.

With regard to improvement areas, previous speakers had said with what satisfaction they saw the question of re-conditioning being tackled. Yet when one really looked at the Bill, what were the additional powers which were being given? Either the local authority could require the houses to be repaired, or demolished. Surely there were already powers for the repair and demolition of houses which could be applied outside improvement areas as well as within.

With regard to the bye-laws, the Bill did give extended powers to apply them to houses occupied by single families, as well as to tenements. But he thought that the local authorities already had powers to prevent overcrowding. No magistrate, however, would enforce bye-laws if numbers of people, who had nowhere else to live, were thereby going to be re-housed.

The Bill was merely a rearrangement of old provisions in new words. The whole matter resolved itself into the question whether the subsidy was or was not an additional incentive to the provision of further housing accommodation. That point had not been touched upon so far, and he would very much appreciate it if following speakers could suggest, for his own information, some way of comparing the additional subsidy which the present Bill gave with the subsidy given in the 1925 Act.

There was another point. Mr. Eason had suggested that the Bill would facilitate the construction of smaller houses which might be let at smaller rents. Personally he was not aware that the re-housing of slum areas had ever been the subject of any maximum or minimum standard.

There was one encouraging clause which he thought possibly affected the profession more than any other clause and that was that, in regard to clearance areas, the local authority could require the owner to demolish the house himself; but the local authority, he understood, provided the alternative accommodation. The same applied in certain cases to the improvement areas. He thought that was something for which property-owners would be grateful. They would be only too pleased if the local authority removed all statutory tenants, and ordered the clearing of sites which could then be re-developed.

There, he thought, surveyors acting for owners of large blocks of property had great opportunities for bringing about co-operation in the formulation of considered schemes of re-development instead of allowing piecemeal building to occur. There, again, one was disappointed that the Bill had not also included provisions for the town planning of built-up areas.

Mr. GEORGE A. LANSDOWN (Fellow) said two points of general interest had occurred to him. One was that the annual outlay contemplated by the Bill was an unknown factor. Miss Susan Lawrence had said, in answer to a question in the House of Commons, that the cost depended upon the activities of the various councils who administered it, which meant that it might be £4,000,000 or £40,000,000.

The second point was that the unit grant might encourage the production of even larger families than already existed among the slum population. He thought that if an essay on the advantages of birth control or the sterilisation of the unfit had accompanied the Bill it would have done a lot of good. As a matter of fact if the public had been educated on those two questions some time ago, the present housing Bill would hardly have been necessary.

Perhaps the members might be interested to know that the Metropolitan Boroughs Standing Joint Committee had met only that afternoon in order to discuss and consider the Bill, and if he mentioned some of the results of that consideration it might be of interest to The Institution.

The Committee thought that Clause 2 (3) should be amended so as to provide that the local authority should have the same powers of recovery of expenses as in Clause 15, Sub-section (5); that was, the expenses should become a charge on the premises.

The second point was in regard to Clause 9, which continued the injustice obtaining in Section 46 of the Housing Act, 1925. The Committee agreed with The Surveyors' Institution that that was an iniquitous section, and they were sending the following resolution on the matter to the Ministry of Health, viz. :—

“ We regret that the Bill proposes to continue the existing provisions relating to the compensation payable to the owners and lessees of property in an insanitary area which have been found in practice to cause grave hardships.”

With regard to Clauses 13 and 42, it was thought that the Metropolitan Borough Councils should have concurrent jurisdiction with the London County Council in regard to Improvement Areas and that the County Council should have power to contribute towards their expenditure in such areas as in the case of Clearance Areas.

With regard to Clauses 19 and 20, dealing with Appeals, a good many of the Committee felt that the county courts were unsatisfactory tribunals. The county courts were already crowded out with work, and would not therefore be able efficiently to deal with the hearings of those appeals as well as the other duties which were thrown upon them. Delay would inevitably result, and would necessarily severely handicap local authorities in the performance of their duties. The Sub-Committee had proposed the following resolution:—

“That the Committee should make representations to the Minister of Health in this sense and suggest these matters would best be dealt with by extending the panel of official arbitrators appointed under the acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919.”

It seemed to some of the Committee that the county court judge would have to say whether a house could or could not be rendered fit for human habitation at a reasonable expense. That was a surveyor's job. Under Clause 19 (3) rules were to be made for an inspection by the judge of the premises. The county court judge would have to call in a surveyor, so why not send the appeals straight to a member of The Surveyors' Institution? Other members thought the “present procedure should be retained, failing “which the appeal should be to a court of summary “jurisdiction.”

The word “may” was prominent throughout the Bill. He agreed with a previous speaker that the word ought to be “must.” Under Section 34 of the Bill, as it stood, many borough councils would pay compensation and a good many other borough councils would not, and there would not be uniformity throughout London.

The Committee thought there should be a Consolidation Bill, and passed the following resolution:—

“Bearing in mind the present involved state of the law regarding housing, and also that the position will become even more involved on the passing of this Measure, we recommend the Committee to urge the Minister of Health to take an early opportunity of introducing a Consolidating Bill.”

The CHAIRMAN, in putting the vote of thanks to the meeting, expressed his own personal appreciation of the way in which the subject had been introduced by Mr. Lawrance. The whole matter bristled with difficulties, and one evening's discussion did not really do justice to it. Nevertheless, most of the sides of the problem had been discussed, pro and con, that evening, and the result of the discussion would be useful and valuable. As the hour was so late, he would ask Mr. Lawrance to reply to the discussion in writing.

The vote of thanks was then put and carried with acclamation, and the meeting terminated.

Mr. LAWRENCE has sent the following written contribution in reply to the discussion:—

I much appreciate the vote of thanks passed by the meeting, and am glad to have had the opportunity of opening so interesting a discussion.

I cannot share the view of Mr. Hunt and Mr. Eason that the doctrine of "environment" will be definitely killed by the Bill. Clause 1 enables dwelling-houses to be included in a clearance area, not only on account of disrepair and sanitary defects, but also because "their bad arrangement, "or the narrowness or bad arrangement of the streets," makes them dangerous or injurious to health. There seems nothing to prevent a house which individually is reasonably sound and sanitary being included in the area on this latter ground. Once included, it is automatically liable to service of a clearance or compulsory purchase order.

I agree that under the Second Schedule, paragraph 5 (iii.), the Minister may exclude from a clearance area property which "ought not to have been so included." But the Minister will probably feel bound to decide what ought or ought not to be included solely by reference to the literal interpretation of the Act, and in such a case as I have assumed I think the local authority might well argue that the inclusion of the property was fully justified by the phrasing of Clause 1.

References were made in the discussion to the need for bye-laws regulating the use of premises by tenants. Model bye-laws on this subject have been published by the Ministry of Health from time to time under powers conferred by Section 6 of the 1925 Act.

I should like to associate myself with Mr. Eason's remarks regarding the wording of the First Schedule, paragraph 5, and the Second Schedule, paragraph 6. Unfortunately the clause is not a new one. It is already in force under the Third Schedule of the 1925 Act. No doubt the extension of its application to the case of clearance areas and improvement areas was suggested by legal arguments in Rex v. Minister of Health; ex parte Yaffe.

The Report of the Council on the affairs of The Institution and the Statement of Receipts and Expenditure for the year 1929 were read.

IT WAS RESOLVED—"That the Report of the Council and the Balance Sheet be received and approved, and be printed and circulated with the Transactions."

IT WAS RESOLVED—"That the thanks of The Institution be given to Messrs. C. DE LA QUINTANA and H. F. CHAMBERS for the efficient performance of their duties as Auditors, and that they be requested to continue their services for the coming year."

IT WAS RESOLVED—"That the thanks of The Institution are due and be given to the PRESIDENT, VICE-PRESIDENTS, and the other MEMBERS AND ASSOCIATES of THE COUNCIL, for the able manner in which they have administered the affairs of The Institution."

IT WAS RESOLVED—"That the thanks of The Institution are due and be given to Mr. A. NORMAN GARRARD (the Honorary Secretary), to Mr. ALEXANDER GODDARD (the Secretary), and the other Officers of The Institution, for the able manner in which they have executed their several duties."

IT WAS RESOLVED—"That the thanks of The Institution be given to Messrs. T. S. BRIGHT, C. S. BURKETT-SMITH, C. DE LA QUINTANA, R. J. DIBDIN, J. G. ELSWORTHY, H. E. GILLETT, H. A. GLOVER, A. G. KEEN, H. A. MACKMIN, J. G. MCSHERRY, R. B. MANN, G. V. NYE and K. B. STANLEY for their services as Scrutineers."

The CHAIRMAN presented the following Prizes won by Candidates in the Preliminary and Professional Examinations, 1930:—

THE "PENFOLD" GOLD MEDAL,

for the highest marks (over 75 % of the maximum) in the Final Examination, to BRYAN LEOLIN RICHARDS, who obtained 827 marks out of 1,000.

Mr. RICHARDS was also the winner of

THE "GALSWORTHY" PRIZE,

BEING THE INTEREST ACCRUING ON A SUM OF £500,

awarded to the Candidate in the Final Examination who, having passed the Intermediate Examination in the Students

Division, is found to have obtained the highest number of marks in the two Examinations combined.

THE "PENFOLD" SILVER MEDAL, for the highest marks (over 75 % of the maximum) in the Students and Non-Students Divisions of the Intermediate Examination, to LESLIE FRANK KIMBER, who obtained 856 marks out of 1,000.

Mr. KIMBER was also the winner of

THE "DRIVER" PRIZE,

BEING THE INTEREST ACCRUING ON A SUM OF £500,

for the highest marks obtained by a Non-Student Candidate in the Intermediate Examination, having obtained 97 % of the maximum marks.

AND

DRAWINGS" PRIZE OF THE VALUE OF £5 5s.

THE "WAINWRIGHT" PRIZE,

BEING THE INTEREST ACCRUING ON A SUM OF £500,

awarded to the Candidate in the Final Examination who, having passed the Intermediate Examination, in the Non-Students Division, is found to have obtained the highest number of marks in the two Examinations combined, to OSWALD HARRY SMITH.

THE "CRAWTER" PRIZE,

BEING THE INTEREST ACCRUING ON A SUM OF £200,

for the best work in "Principles and Practice of Valuation," to HARRY NOEL VENNER, who obtained 94 % of the maximum marks.

THE "INSTITUTION" PRIZE OF THE VALUE
OF £15 15s.

awarded to the Candidate at the head of the list in the Students Division of the Intermediate Examination, to VICTOR HENRY RENDELL, who obtained 777 marks out of 1,000.

THE "SPECIAL" PRIZE OF THE VALUE OF

to WALTER ASHBY HOWKINS, with an aggregate of 752 marks out of 1,000.

THE "BEADEL" PRIZE,

BEING THE INTEREST ACCRUING ON A SUM OF £200, for the best work in the subject of "Agriculture," to HENRY SAXELBY DYER, who obtained 85 % of the maximum marks.

THE "QUANTITIES" PRIZE OF THE VALUE
OF £5 5s.

to JAMES GIBSON, who obtained 90 % of the maximum marks.

THE "MELLERSH" PRIZE,

BEING THE INTEREST ACCRUING ON A SUM OF £100, for the best work in "Outdoor Forestry, Timber Valuing
"and Measuring," to THOMAS ASHTON HENDERSON, who obtained 73 % of the maximum marks.

THE "SCOTTISH" PRIZE, awarded to the Candidate from Scotland who obtained the highest number of marks in the Intermediate Examination, to JOHN ALEXANDER GRAY, who obtained 690 marks out of 1,000.

THE "JULIAN ROGERS" SCHOLARSHIP, awarded to the Candidate at the head of the list in the Preliminary Examination, to WILFRID HAROLD MILLARD, who obtained 386 marks out of 500.

THE SIXTY-SECOND ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COUNCIL.

ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING,
Monday, 26th May, 1930.

Of the many questions which claimed the attention of the Council during the year, perhaps the most important to be decided was whether the policy of statutory registration should again be proceeded with and a Bill promoted. It is now a matter of history that The Institution, The Auctioneers' and Estate Agents' Institute and the Land Agents' Society co-operated in 1923 to introduce a Bill which, although read a first time, encountered a considerable amount of opposition and did not make further progress. The promoting societies, therefore, decided to defer its reintroduction for the time being.

A recent movement in favour of registration on lines somewhat opposed to those supported by the promoting societies has led to a review of the whole policy, with the result that the Councils of the three societies have arrived at the conclusion that the advantages which might attend registration are, under present conditions, insufficient to counterbalance the loss of those attaching to the existing system. The reasons for this conclusion are set out in a Memorandum which has already appeared in the Journal.

Mr. A. Norman Garrard, who has held the office of Hon. Secretary since 1918, has intimated his wish to retire at the end of this session, a decision which the many members to whom his unfailing courtesy and tact had endeared him will learn with regret. The sincere thanks of the Council are due to Mr. Garrard for the services he has rendered to them and The Institution for the past 12 years.

Messrs. T. W. A. Hayward and S. Vyvian Hicks retired from the Council at the end of last session, the former on retirement as Borough Surveyor of Battersea and the latter on transfer to Fellowship. The Council wish to record their sense of gratitude to both gentlemen for the loyal and unselfish service they gave to The Institution during their years of office.

Membership.

Death has again exacted a heavy toll in membership during the year, and among those whose passing must be mourned are two Past-Presidents and other names of note in the profession. The Hon. Edward Strutt, C.H., and Mr. C. B. Fisher, C.B.E., occupied the Institution Chair with a distinction recognised outside as well as within the profession, and their services to the Country and to the cause of agriculture are widely known. Special mention must also be made of Mr. J. Campbell Murray, Glasgow (1899) and Mr. J. A. Rutherford, Newbury (1889), both Past-Members of Council; Mr. Samuel Clark, London (1882); Mr. George Ferris, Milton-Lilborne (1883); Mr. Alan Paull, London (1883); Mr. Albert Burtenshaw, Hailsham (1884); Mr.

Finance.

Owing to the adoption of the recommendation made by the auditors a year ago that the examination fees received in the autumn of each year should be brought into account for the year in which the examination is held and its expenses incurred, the sum of £4,059 received in respect of examination fees in 1929 has been placed in suspense account and will be brought into account for the balance sheet of 1930. As a result the income and expenditure account for 1929 shows a deficit. This, however, is purely a paper deficit, and the total receipts for the year from all sources, subscriptions, entrance fees of new members, examinations, &c., exceeded the total expenditure by £3,019. The Institution is, therefore, in a sound financial position. The growing expenditure in respect of County Branches, the Junior Organisation and Branches, and greater publicity, together with the possibility of a need for the extension of The Institution buildings after the falling in of the lease of No. 11, Great George Street, which unless renewed terminates in seven years' time, all point to increased financial commitments and the desirability of adding to the reserves of The Institution.

The Examinations.

The changes in the professional examinations which are to come into force in 1932 necessitated an entire revision of the Syllabus, a somewhat heavy task which was completed by the Education Committee during the year. The amended Syllabus and Rules of Examination, embodying the changes proposed, are now ready for use by candidates intending to come up for examination after 1931.

Tables C and D show the number of candidates who sat for the examinations this year and the number who passed.

One hundred and twenty-two candidates came up for re-examination in their Typical Subject, and of these 89 were successful.

The number of examinees sitting in Glasgow was 53, of whom 31 entered for the Intermediate, 12 for the Final, 1 for the Direct Fellowship Examination, and 9 for the Typical Subjects only. Of these, 36 satisfied the examiners, while 8 were referred back in Typical Subjects.

Five candidates sat in Dublin, 4 for the Intermediate and 1 for the Final Examination, and of these 4 were successful.

The Special Diploma Examinations.

The five Special Diploma Examinations were all held in 1929, which was a "triennial" year. Of the five candidates who presented themselves for the Rating, three, Messrs. W. Hosking, J. C. Pinkerton and J. R. Toovey, were successful. Three sat for the diploma in Agricultural and Tenant-Right Valuations, but failed; Mr. J. S. Eyre-Matcham, the only candidate who came up in Forestry, was successful; in Sanitary Science there were two candidates, and one, Mr. J. C. Wilford, passed; one candidate presented himself in Land Surveying and Levelling, but failed. The Rating Diploma Examination will again be held in 1930; for the others, however, the five candidates required for a non-triennial year were not forthcoming.

The advantages of the Rating Diploma are, it would seem, fairly widely appreciated, but in order to attract more candidates for the Forestry and Sanitary Science Diplomas, certain changes were decided upon during the year. In future candidates will be able to take each of these examinations in two parts, theoretical and practical, the first of which may be taken by members under 25, subject to less stringent conditions as to practical experience than at present. Those conditions, however, and also the minimum age limit of 25, will continue to apply to the second, or practical, portion of the examinations, but candidates taking both parts at the same time and passing in one only will not be required to present themselves again for the part in which they were successful.

In view of the growing importance of town planning, the Council have decided to institute a Special Diploma Examination in that subject. This is referred to elsewhere in the Annual Report.

The Examiners.

The Council must again place on record their indebtedness to the Examiners whose heavy and responsible duties have, as always, been carried through with care and efficiency. There have been a few changes in personnel since last year, due in each case to retirement or death. Mr. H. C. Naldrett replaces his father, the late Mr. E. J. Naldrett, K.C., in Compulsory Purchase; Mr. A. C. Longland takes the Law of Vendors and Purchasers, vice Judge Eustace Hills, K.C.; Mr. H. A. Mackmin the higher morning paper in Quantities (Final), vice Mr. E. C. Harris, resigned; Mr. H. Lynch-Blosse succeeds his partner, the late Mr. H. T. Wales, in Report and Support and Subsidence (Mining Sub-Division); and the late Mr. James Wilson is replaced by the Rev. Dr. W. J. Perry in Hydrostatics and Mechanics and Mr. C. A. Bennett in Algebra, respectively. Dr. Perry also succeeds Mr. Wilson as Examiner in the Preliminary.

The University Scholarships.

Sixteen candidates, as compared with fifteen last year, presented themselves for the competitive examination held in January. Of the two scholarships offered, however, only one was awarded, the successful candidate being Mr. W. J. F. Jarmain (Shrewsbury School), a son of Mr. W. Jarmain (Fellow).

As, in the opinion of the Council, the objects of the scholarships were not being attained under the system hitherto in force, certain radical changes have been decided upon. Henceforward, one three-year scholarship of £100 per annum, tenable at Cambridge, will be offered annually, the selected candidate being required to take one out of several degree courses prescribed by the Council; and, in addition, three one-year courses of £125 each, also tenable at Cambridge, unless the successful applicant has applied to use his emoluments for travel. Holders of one-year courses will be required to state the line of study they propose to follow, and to undergo such courses of lectures and instruction as may be prescribed, and carry out an original piece of work under their supervisor's guidance. Awards of scholarships and one-year courses will in future be made by selection instead of by competitive examination.

The College of Estate Management.

In the recent professional examinations, out of the 289 candidates, including those from Scotland and Ireland, who were successful in the Intermediate, and the 230 who passed the Final, 179 and 185 respectively were prepared by the College, as were 9 out of the 12 candidates who passed the Special Single Examination for degree-holders and the 7 successful in the Direct Fellowship. Ten Institution prizes and medals were awarded to College students.

The Publications.

The following Papers were read and discussed at Ordinary General Meetings during the session:—

Date.	Subject of Paper.	Author.
1929.
Nov. 11 ...	The Opening Address ...	The President.
Dec. 9 ...	The Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, in Operation	Mr. W. E. A. Bull (Professional Associate).
'1930.
Jan. 6 ...	Town Planning of Built-up Areas	Mr. William Townend (Fellow).
Feb. 10 ...	The Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928	Mr. J. C. Milne (Fellow) (Special Rating Diploma).
March 10	Recent Developments in Electricity Supply in Great Britain, with special reference to Rural Electrification	Sir Harry Haward (Electricity Commissioner).
April 7 ...	The Future of British Agriculture	Professor T. Wibberley.
May 5 ...	The Housing (No. 2) Bill.	A general discussion introduced by Mr. D. M. Lawrence, B.Sc. (Professional Associate).

The attendance of members at these meetings has been satisfactory, and the discussions interesting and instructive. The thanks of the Council are due both to the lecturers and to those who by studying the Papers to be read and putting their point of view in discussion have added considerably to the value of the meetings.

The List of Members for 1930 has been altered in form by doing away with the old duplication of addresses, and the insertion of an alphabetical list of all members in place of the previous sub-division into classes. For the suggestions leading to these improvements the Council are indebted to the London (South-Western) and City Branch Executives, the Junior Committee and the professional clubs who were responsible for originating them. The new form will, it is felt, add to the convenience of the List for reference purposes to members and others using it, and in this connection it may be mentioned that a large number of copies have been circulated to quarters outside the profession where a record of Institution membership is likely to prove of value.

The Library and Collections.

The additions to the Library during the year include a number of new works by leading authorities on subjects affecting the profession, and new editions of standard reference books. Among the purchases may be mentioned The Complete Statutes of England, classified and annotated, a work recently published in continuation of Lord Halsbury's Laws of England.

The collection, referred to in the last Annual Report, of town planning schemes finally authorised by the Minister of Health, has now been completed and filed, and the series will be enlarged as further schemes are approved. A number of reports by Regional Planning Committees has also been secured, and the set will be added to as others become available.

The Library Committee welcome at all times suggestions from members which might add to the usefulness of the Library, and would in particular be glad to have information as to topographical works of interest to the profession which may from time come into the market.

The nomenclature of the palaeontological collection has been completely revised and brought up to date by an expert engaged for the purpose.

Further examples of fungal disease and insect pests have been added to the Forestry Museum during the year, and a number of enquiries on timber marketing, plant disease, identification of trees and shrubs and insect attack have been received and dealt with. An exhibit in connection with the marketing of coppice wood has been collected, and will shortly be on view. The specimen planks in the Museum have been refaced, but reserves are urgently needed to replace the older specimens, which can no longer be considered truly representative.

The Standing and Special Committees.

Eleven meetings of the Council and 96 meetings of the Standing and Special Committees and their Sub-Committees have been held during the session, as compared with 12 and 87, the respective figures for last year. In addition there were several meetings of the Sanitary Science Diploma Section.

The work of the Parliamentary Committee included the compilation of a Memorandum on the Housing Act, 1925, with special reference to its provisions for the colouring of property to be acquired and the compensation payable; the preparation of evidence for Lord Donoughmore's Committee on the powers of Ministers of the Crown and legislation by departmental decision; the scrutiny of a number of Public Bills, including the Coast Protection Bill, the Housing (No. 2) Bill, the Land Drainage Bill, the Reservoirs (Safety Provisions) Bill, the Agents (Deposit) Bill, and the Road Traffic Bill. Arrangements were also made for the examination of Private Bills, and the attention of the appropriate County Branches was called to the effect of the town-planning and various other provisions in the Birkenhead, Bournemouth, Cardiff, Rotherham, Epsom, Guildford, Liverpool and Wednesbury Bills of this year.

Evidence was given before Dr. Addison's Committee on National Parks, who had asked for The Institution's views, in particular as to what basis of compensation would be fair to owners of land scheduled for reservation without involving too heavy a charge upon public funds. In order that uniformity of view might be secured, the Central Landowners' Association and the Land Agents' Society were called into consultation, and collaborated with The Institution in preparing and presenting the evidence.

The anticipated effect on the mining branch of the profession of the proposal for transferring the ownership of mineral royalties to the State was discussed by the Mining Surveyors' Committee at several meetings, and a deputation attended before the Secretary for Mines with satisfactory results. A report appeared in the Journal for December.

The Agricultural and Forestry Committees have dealt, among others, with the following matters, the majority of which have been the subject of articles in the Journal: The rating of sporting rights and of farmhouses and cottages; the Roads Improvement Act, 1925, and its effect on rural land; whether charges for tenant-right had priority over mortgages; the preparation of a model agreement for the sale of timber, and notes on timber marketing; questions upon the taxation and rating of woodlands: whether income tax was payable on Forestry Commission grants to owners, and the leasing of land to the Commission. Upon the recommendation of these Committees, counsel's opinion was obtained and published (1) as to the legal position of a purchaser of standing timber from a tenant for life where the latter dies before the timber has been felled and removed; (2) as to the effect of the county court case of Clarey v. Woodthorpe on procedure under Section 16 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923. It was also decided, in conjunction with other representative bodies, to endeavour, by selecting a suitable test case, to obtain an authoritative decision as to the correct principle for dealing with claims for temporary pasture, and so put an end to the doubt which has for so long existed among agricultural valuers on that point.

The Committee set up to examine generally the causes of bursts in gas and water mains, and the possibility of introducing preventive and protective measures, completed their task during the year. Their report was forwarded by the Council to the Minister of Health, and created wide interest among local and statutory authorities and in the Press.

In response to a request from the Ministry of Health Advisory Committee on Water, the latter's proposals for amending and simplifying the existing law relating to water supply were considered and reported upon, a special Committee being appointed for the purpose. Their Memorandum appeared in the Journal for May.

In addition to matters of routine, the Professional Practice Committee have considered in their general aspect questions of practice arising out of co-operation between agents for the sale of property, and in particular the proper apportionment of commission on the sale of fixtures, furniture, &c., between the co-operating agent and the one originally appointed for the sale (see Journal, page 410). A case where a firm of solicitors who, in giving instructions for the sale of property, had asked for a share of the agents' commission was reported to the Law Society. Another question to which the Committee are giving special attention is the growth of advertising in the profession, a problem which, as members will realise, is beset with many difficulties.

The effect of the expenditure authorised for publicity purposes, aided by the co-operation of Branch secretaries in that direction, has been reflected in the increasing attention devoted to The Institution and its activities in the Press. Further measures are under consideration which, it is hoped, may place the chartered surveyor more prominently before the public, and bring about a wider understanding of his functions and his usefulness to the community.

A report on the work of the Quantity Surveyors' Committee during the year is being issued separately to members practising in Quantities.

The County Branches.

The County Branch organisation has again amply proved its value to The Institution during the year, and the Council must here acknowledge their indebtedness to the Chairmen, Hon. Secretaries and Executives for the services they have so freely and unselfishly given. A table showing the membership and officers of Branches on 1st January, 1930, appears in the current list of members.

The Annual Conference between the Council and officers of the County Branches was held on 11th March. The attendance was full and representative, and the debates on a number of domestic matters were especially interesting and ably conducted. A report of the proceedings appeared in the April number of the Journal.

The Annual Summer Meeting at Belfast in June proved most enjoyable, and the thanks of the Council are due to the Northern Ireland Reception Committee for the admirable arrangements which, true to the Irish tradition of hospitality, they made for the benefit of visiting members. They must also record their gratitude to the Lord Mayor and Corporation of Belfast for their courtesy in permitting the use of the City Hall and to Messrs. Harland & Wolff for the visit of inspection to their great undertaking.

It is not, perhaps, necessary to refer in detail to the meetings and other activities of the Branches, since these have already been reported month by month in the Journal. The following list, necessarily incomplete, of some of the subjects discussed during the year will serve as indication of their usefulness and diversity: Rights of light; rating reform; co-operation in farming; unexhausted values of various manurial residues; the imposition and removal of restrictive covenants; problems of water supply; garden cities; town and regional planning in various aspects; the proper interpretation of "primary use and occupation" and other problems connected with de-rating; the recent changes in local government.

The Hong-Kong Branch held their first annual meeting and the Ceylon Branch their first annual dinner during the year.

The Junior Organisation.

The programme of Papers and discussions arranged for the evening meetings in London during the session was as follows: "Principles Relating to Valuations considered 'from an Economic Standpoint,'" by Mr. N. P. Risdon, P.A.S.I. (awarded the President's Prize); "Real Property 'or Stock Exchange?" by Mr. F. A. Wagstaff, P.A.S.I. (awarded the Ryde Memorial Prize by the Chartered Surveyors' (1913) Club); "The Evolution of Egg-Marketing 'in England,'" by Mr. J. S. Gates, P.A.S.I.; the discussion of topical and internal affairs in connection with the Junior Organisation, a new experiment which proved popular; "The Settlement of Claims for Damage caused by Colliery 'Workings,'" by Mr. H. A. Booth, P.A.S.I.; "Land Registration and its Application to the Development of Building 'Estates,'" by H. N. G. Shephard, P.A.S.I.

On 24th February a moot was held at The Institution in conjunction with the Law Society's School of Law. The case was a light and air dispute in connection with premises in the City of London, and was conducted as though in the Chancery Division of the High Court. The Right Hon. Lord Hanworth (Master of the Rolls) honoured the Organisation by taking the chair and delivered judgment at the conclusion of the proceedings. Messrs. A. C. Savill, M.C., A. R. C. Hall, W. E. A. Bull and C. H. Waldram (Junior Members of The Institution) were the expert witnesses retained in the case.

The Annual Full Committee Meeting, at which representatives of the great majority of the then existing Junior Branches were present, was held on 13th December, when matters of professional and domestic interest were discussed. The Annual Dinner in the evening was attended by a hundred and fifteen persons, and was an occasion of special interest in that 1929 was the fortieth year of the Junior Organisation's existence. The Annual Dance, arranged by the Junior Committee in aid of the Benevolent Fund, was held at the Prince's Galleries in February, and was greatly enjoyed. The profit from the sale of tickets amounted to £59.

New Junior Branches were formed during the period under review for Middlesex and Urban Essex; the Rural Essex Sub-Area; Berks, Bucks and Oxon; Nottinghamshire, Lincolnshire and Derbyshire; Northumberland and Durham; Devon and Cornwall; and Kent; thus bringing the total number of Junior Branches in the country to fourteen.

The Chairman of the Junior Organisation for the year was Mr. Harry D. A. Watney, and the Hon. Secretary Mr. J. A. F. Watson. The names of the Junior Committee appear in the current List of Members. The Council desire to place on record their gratitude to these gentlemen and to the officers and committees of Junior Branches for the keenness and devotion with which they have carried out their duties, and for the valuable suggestions they have made during the year for advancing the aims of The Institution and its usefulness to members.

The Employment Register.

During the period under review there were 273 names entered on the Register. Of these 88 were out of employment, 168 were employed but desirous of obtaining better appointments, and a further 11 were also employed but seeking part time or temporary work. The appointments obtained through the Register in the course of the year numbered 104, of which 21 were in the Land Agency Branch of the profession, 45 in the Valuation Branch, and 17 and 21, respectively, in those of Building and Quantities.

The existence and advantages of the Register are specially brought to the notice of members, both through the Journal and the County Branches, from time to time. The Council hope that Senior Members will make it their custom to notify the Secretary of their requirements as vacancies on their staffs occur.

The Register is already well known to many of the Government Departments, and its machinery was used during the year by the Admiralty, War Office, Air Ministry, Ministry of Labour, the Crown Agents to the Colonies, and the Governments of Sarawak and the Sudan.

Miscellaneous.

In addition to the work carried out exclusively by the Council and Committees of The Institution, a number of important questions were dealt with or investigated in co-operation with other bodies. A conference with the Central Landowners' Association and the Land Agents Society was convened to settle a reasonable form of agreement for the grant of electricity wayleaves and to discuss rentals; its conclusions were embodied in memoranda which were published in the Journal for September and January. In conjunction with the Law Society, and a number of other interested bodies, it was decided to press, in the first suitable public Bill, for an amendment in the definition of "owner" as settled in the recent case of Watts v. Battersea Corporation, in which, it will be remembered, a solicitor receiving rents for a client was held personally liable for the cost of repairs to working-class property. A series of joint meetings were also held with representatives of the Royal Institute of British Architects, the Town Planning Institute and the Institution of Municipal and County Engineers to co-ordinate professional examinations in town planning. It has been decided as a result to set up a Joint Examination Board to organise and carry through these examinations, which will be divided into sections appropriate to the sphere of each society. A pass in the Surveying Section will entitle the successful candidate to an Institution Special Diploma in town planning.

Apart from the matters referred to under other headings, The Institution has been asked to advise or collaborate in connection with the following:—

Ministry of Health.—Rural water supplies; new town planning legislation; deaths from gas poisoning.

Civil Service Commissioners.—Selection of candidates for appointment as assistant surveyors to the Admiralty and Air Ministry.

British Engineering Standards Association.—Standard specifications for vitrified ware pipes; quick-lime plastering; portable railway track; expanded steel; galvanised cisterns and hot-water tanks; gypsum plaster.

Institution of Civil Engineers.—Quantities for engineering works.

City and Guilds of London Institute.—Examinations in builders' quantities.

Income Tax Payers Society.—Deputation to the Chancellor of the Exchequer to discuss the prohibitive costs of income and super tax appeals.

In conjunction with the local Chamber of Commerce a protest was made against the appointment of a collector of taxes in a south coast town with permission to carry on a private business as a house and estate agent.

Mr. Thomas Adams (Fellow) was nominated to represent The Institution at the Sixth International Road Congress to be held in Washington this year; the President and Mr. Oswald Healing (Fellow) were similarly nominated to the Fifth International Congress of Public Works; Colonel S. H. Page and Mr. R. C. Jull (Fellows) to the Royal Sanitary Institute Congress at Margate in June, 1930; and Mr. G. L. Brighton (Fellow) to the Council of the newly formed British Wood Preserving Association.

It is a matter of great satisfaction to the Council that The Institution were invited in April to join the Central Chamber of Agriculture as an honorary affiliated association. Messrs. J. E. Bidwell (Fellow), Robert Cobb (Fellow) and the Secretary were nominated as deputies to the Central Chamber.

An address of congratulation was presented to the University of Capetown in connection with the centenary celebrations of the South African College, now incorporated in the University. The Institution was personally represented by Mr. A. T. Babbs (Fellow).

The sum of 100 guineas was presented to the Chapter of South African Quantity Surveyors, which is affiliated to The Institution, towards the expenses incurred in promoting registration of architects and quantity surveyors in the Dominion.

The Council have to record with regret the death of Mr. Thomas Meares, who had acted as solicitor to The Institution for many years. Mr. Dixon H. Davies, senior partner in Messrs. Beale & Co., of Westminster, has been appointed to succeed him, and will carry on the connection with that firm which has subsisted since The Institution's foundation.

The furniture in the members' reading and writing rooms on the ground floor of No. 12, Great George Street has been renovated and added to during the year.

The President has made the following nominations during the year for appointment to statutory committees advising local authorities on the elevation of buildings: Stoke-on-Trent, Mr. Henry Vale (Fellow); Nottingham, Mr. J. E. Drower, C.E.A. (Fellow); Guildford, Mr. Dendy Watney (Past-President); Exeter, Mr. Arthur Body (Fellow).

The Central Valuation Committee, whose members include Colonel Joseph Spain and Sir James Slade (Fellows), issued their fifth series of representations during the year.

Mr. F. H. Wagstaff (Fellow) was elected Master of the Armourers' and Braziers' Company for 1929-30.

During the year the Rt. Hon. Lord Bledisloe, P.C., K.B.E. (Hon. Member), was appointed Governor-General of New Zealand; Mr. William Allen (Associate), King's Counsel; Mr. A. E. Mirams (Fellow), Town Planning Adviser to the Government of Kenya and Uganda; Mr. E. P. Weller (Fellow), Fellow and Bursar of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge; Mr. A. de M. Chesterman (P.A.), Lecturer in Estate Management, Cambridge.

Sir George Courthorpe, Bt., M.C. (Associate of Council), Sir Philip Pilditch, Bt. (Fellow), Sir Joseph McConnell (Fellow), and the Rt. Hon. Sir J. Tudor Walters (Fellow), were returned to Parliament at the General Election in May, 1929.

The following honours were conferred on members during the year by His Majesty the King:—

Sir PHILIP PILDITCH	...	...	...	...	Baronetcy.
Mr. C. H. GOTT	...	...	...	...	Knighthood.
Mr. G. M. TRENCH	...	...	...	...	O.B.E.

ADDENDUM.

Notes from the Reports of the Examiners, 1930.

It is not the purpose of these notes to give a general synopsis of candidates' work, but rather to indicate, for the benefit of those responsible for their instruction, the directions in which failures have occurred. It may be mentioned here, however, that the examiners have reported favourably on the general standard attained by candidates in the following subjects: Agricultural Chemistry; Land Drainage; Agriculture; Agricultural Law; Agricultural Valuations; Farm Homesteads; Geology and Soils; Forestry (Indoors); Compulsory Purchase; Report, I. and IV.; Support and Subsidence; London Building Acts; Book-keeping.

Bad handwriting is again commented upon by several of the examiners. One of the latter, a member in busy practice, was compelled to spend some hours in deciphering a single paper. Two examiners remarked upon bad spelling and indifferent English. Many candidates taking the House Drainage and Plumbing paper did not know how many gallons there were in a cubic foot of water.

A number of candidates lost marks by failing to read and get to grips with the questions asked, or wasted time by repeating the questions at the beginning of their answers. The art of elucidating an answer by a simple sketch was not sufficiently employed in the Agricultural Botany and London Building Acts papers. On the other hand several candidates in Sub-Division III. made the mistake of providing sketches in their Report paper when a written explanation was required. Diffuseness and irrelevancy where brief and concise answers would have sufficed was remarked upon by several examiners; in the Specifications and Book-keeping papers some candidates wrote essays instead of setting out their answers in a direct and accepted form.

Sub-Division I.

Agricultural Valuations.—Standard generally high, but some candidates were lacking in adaptability, e.g., they found difficulty in calculating the contents of a stack from dimensions given in yards if they were accustomed to measuring in feet.

Agricultural Chemistry.—The chemistry of feeding stuffs seems to have been neglected.

Animal Physiology.—Standard as a whole low; many candidates did not know how to feed a horse, or which diseases were notifiable by law.

Report.—Standard as a whole good. No candidate, however, was sufficiently courageous to discard the original development scheme and propose another. Many rightly saw that the northern land should have been developed first, but even they were content to report on the original plan.

Farm Homesteads.—Nearly half the candidates showed the main diagonal brace of a field gate the wrong way up.

Generally.—The examiners' reports indicate that the standard of work is distinctly higher than in previous years.

Sub-Division II.

Valuations.—Only a small proportion of candidates seemed able to find without tables the gross and rateable values of a dwelling-house let at an inclusive weekly rent, or to possess even an elementary idea of what is meant by a contingent reversion. Many appeared to think that valuation was a purely mathematical process, one candidate actually stating that differences of opinion on value would be eliminated by the correct use of tables. Others could not distinguish between the losses caused by removal of an old-established tradesman's business and that of a solicitor.

Law of Vendors and Purchasers.—Standard generally lower than in recent years. The questions on "Time as “ the essence of the contract,” sales by tenants for life, and the Sale of Goods Act were badly answered. Many candidates did not know of the Auctions (Bidding Agreements) Act.

Report.—Distinctly better than last year, particularly in the diminished use of slang and pseudo-technical terms. Candidates, however, were still inclined to attach greater importance to headings than to interconnection between sentences and continuity of argument in their reports. It was significant that so few candidates selected the first alternative subject and the opportunity it provided for free writing and originality of thought.

Fixtures, Dilapidations, and Easements.—Standard lower than in recent years. There was confusion between the Rent Restriction and the Housing Acts, and a surprising failure to explain the liabilities of a valuer who works for reward. The law of waste and party-walls was imperfectly understood.

Sub-Division III.

Constructive and Working Drawings.—The examiners report that there were too many candidates taking the higher papers whose draughtsmanship and ideas of design were of the crudest character.

Quantities.—With the exception of candidates up for re-examination in their typical subject, the standard of the higher papers was more satisfactory this year. From the Intermediate work, however, it would appear that increased practice is required in averaging simple digging and in building up as few side casts on waste as possible to arrive at the main dimensions necessary in a variety of cases, and their adjustment to make up the dimensions for subsidiary items. Inaccuracy in measuring the casement given was also a common fault. In the Final a good many papers betrayed unfamiliarity with the “Standard Method of Measurement.” The plumbing question produced less satisfactory answers than those on joinery, and some candidates showed mitres to architraves enumerated. The setting out of the work was generally slovenly and the order of taking off indifferent. Headings and annotations were omitted in most cases.

The lower papers also were generally of a higher standard this year, but here also the "Standard Method" has been insufficiently studied. Candidates were inclined to place speed above accuracy in their measurements.

Iron and Timber Roofs.—In Question No. 2 most candidates provided a king post roof truss, which is unsuitable for a public hall, and many omitted the pier to carry the ends of the trusses. In Question No. 3 the majority provided too many rain-water pipes, and showed lead valleys instead of valley tiles which would have been preferable. The wrong number of flues to chimney-stacks was a very common mistake.

House Drainage and Plumbers' Work.—Poor; the most marked feature being an inability to put even an elementary knowledge of levelling to practical use in connection with drainage problems. This deficiency is one requiring serious attention. Other points which seem to have been neglected were: Possible output of a 4-inch drain laid at the recognised minimum fall; air-disconnected drains and their uses; stock lengths of stoneware and iron pipes. Many candidates could quote formulæ for velocities and outputs of drains, but lacked the ability to apply them in practice.

Report.—Standard poor; candidates did not exercise sufficient care in reading the questions set, and spent unnecessary time in drawing to show the proposed improvements in the planning of the house.

Sub-Divison IV.

Valuation of Mineral Properties.—Some candidates did not understand what provision is made for redemption of capital in an annuity table nor appreciate properly the operation of a sinking fund.

Support and Subsidence.—The Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Act, 1923, should have been more closely studied; sketches in many cases were poor.

Generally.—The standard attained was satisfactory.

General Subjects.

Copyholds.—Calculations for Lord's Compensation, an important matter, were on the whole poorly done. Some candidates incorrectly gave their summarised compensation figures in decimals of a £.

Town Planning and Building Estates.—Report work poor; too little attention given to the application of the Town Planning Act, 1925. Certain candidates resorted to methods of laying out land which were in force prior to the advent of town planning.

Surveying and Levelling.—There was a general unfamiliarity with practical methods of taking out areas of enclosed figures; the ordinary method of squaring was not used in a single case. The ordinary conventions of co-ordinate plotting and the meaning of a "probable error" were unknown to the majority of candidates. The teaching of traversing appears to be too stereotyped. Most candidates could not use their theoretical knowledge reasonably or apply it to field work.

Economics.—There was insufficient appreciation of fundamental conceptions, and evidence of loose and inaccurate ideas as to the meaning of wealth and capital.

Road-making.—Draftsmanship poor; most candidates lacked knowledge of the scientific principles of road construction, and there was a widespread and pronounced weakness in road bridge work.

Dilapidations.—Too little attention seems to have been given to the statutes governing repairs to various classes of property.

Imperial Taxation.—A number of candidates still found it difficult to deal with practical questions on assessments.

ROYAL CHARTERS.

Royal Charters are granted by the Sovereign on the advice of the Lords of His Privy Council.

The grant of a Charter to a professional society may therefore be taken as indicating that the highest authority in the kingdom is satisfied that a high standard of professional qualification is required for membership, and that the society is in a position to advance technical knowledge, to raise and maintain the status of the profession it represents, and to provide information on subjects coming within its scope to the public advantage.

The Surveyors' Institution

(INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER)

Is established under the terms of its Royal Charters :—

1. To secure the advancement and facilitate the acquisition of that knowledge which constitutes the profession of a Surveyor, viz.—the art of determining the value of all descriptions of landed, mineral and house property, and of the various interests therein; the practice of managing and developing estates; and the science of admeasuring and delineating the physical features of the earth, and of measuring and estimating artificers' work.
2. To promote the general interests of the profession, and to maintain and extend its usefulness for the public advantage.

THE INSTITUTION was founded in 1868 under the title of The Institution of Surveyors. It was incorporated under Royal Charter in 1881, the name then being changed to The Surveyors' Institution. A further Charter was granted in 1921. Entrance examinations to qualify for membership were started in 1881, and became compulsory in 1891. The Institution was, therefore, the first professional society, other than those representing law and medicine, to initiate severe examination tests as the qualification for membership.

PRIVILEGES OF MEMBERSHIP.

Fellows and Professional Associates are permitted to place the initials F.S.I. and P.A.S.I. respectively after their names, and to use the designation "Chartered Surveyor," subject to the provisions of the By-Laws. Membership of the Institution, as indicated by the use of these letters and designation, is laid down as an essential qualification for many official and other appointments. Its value is also becoming increasingly recognised in connection with work for trustees, mortgage valuations, arbitrations, evidence before the Courts, etc.

Members, both corporate and non-corporate, have the right to attend the Ordinary General Meetings, meetings of their County Branch, and, if under 33 years of age, the Junior Meetings, and have the privilege of introducing visitors. They receive the Journal, which is issued in twelve monthly parts, and a copy of any other printed publication issued by the Institution. They may avail themselves of the Queries and Replies section of the Journal, and so secure the benefit of the knowledge and experience of fellow members in questions arising in daily practice. They may use the Library and Loan Library and the Employment Register.

The Incorporated Benevolent Fund of the Institution is established to provide for the needs of members and their dependents who, by reason of age, sickness or other unavoidable misfortune, are unable to support themselves. It is maintained entirely by voluntary contributions.

ORGANIZATION AND ACTIVITIES.

The affairs of the Institution are under the management of a Council, elected annually by ballot of all corporate members. The Council are advised by the County Branches and a number of Standing and Special Committees appointed to consider the various matters referred to them. Their work includes the examination of Parliamentary Bills affecting the valuation, management, and development of landed property, and the various interests therein; the preparation of memoranda, and the submission of evidence for the use of Government Departments, Royal Commissions and departmental and other Committees in connection with matters upon which the collective knowledge of the profession would prove of assistance; and the rendering of advice to Imperial or Local Authorities when called upon to do so by statute or otherwise.

In addition to their activities in the advancement of the public interest, the Council have continually in view the elevation, ethical as well as intellectual, of the profession which they represent. In addition to the practical help which they have afforded to places of professional instruction, the foundation of scholarships and the furtherance of technical education generally, they have felt it their duty strictly to administer the rules of conduct which all members are required by the By-Laws to observe. The Council have also, through their Professional Practice Committee, used their influence in inspiring a high ideal of professional honour among members.

The Session of the Institution commences annually on the Second Monday in November, and continues to the end of May. The Ordinary General Meetings are held monthly during the Session, and in addition two Meetings of members practising in Quantities are arranged. At these Meetings original papers on professional subjects are read and their merits fully and freely discussed. Every member has the privilege of introducing visitors.

THE COUNTY BRANCHES.

The organization of the Institution includes a system of Metropolitan and County Branches, the object of which is to enable the Council to give the considered views of the profession from all parts of the country on matters of public interest; to afford opportunity for members generally to take an active part in the affairs of the Institution; and to assist the Council in ascertaining their local wants and wishes. The system includes machinery for local representation on, and succession to, the Council and Standing Committees and provides, in addition, opportunities for the discussion of professional questions and social intercourse at centres easily accessible to members in country districts. The affairs of each Metropolitan and County Branch are managed by an Executive Committee elected annually.

THE JUNIOR ORGANIZATION.

The Junior Organization was established for the benefit of the younger members of the Institution, to bring them into closer touch with the Council, and, by fostering among them an interest in professional affairs, to prepare them for higher office in the future. The work of the Junior Organization is administered by a representative Central Executive Committee which is responsible to the Council for their affairs as a whole. Junior branches in the County Branch districts have been established where justified by numbers and the existence of accessible local centres.

SCHOLARSHIPS AND PRIZES.

Two Scholarships, of an annual value of £130 each if held at Oxford or Cambridge, and £100 if held at any other recognised University or affiliated College, and tenable for three years, are offered annually by the Institution. The holder of a Scholarship must agree to enter into Articles or become otherwise professionally engaged, on completing his University course, in the office of a Chartered Surveyor practising in Great Britain and Ireland or, in suitable cases, in the Dominions and Colonies, and in due course to present himself for the examinations of the Institution, with a view to attaining membership. A portion of the Scholarship emoluments is retained by the Council until the scholar has entered the Surveying profession, when the accrued balance is paid over to him. Detailed particulars of the conditions and of the competitive examination may be obtained on application to the Secretary.

A number of valuable prizes are offered in connection with the Institution Examinations.

MEMBERSHIP.

The total membership of the Institution is over 6,700, and consists of four classes, viz.: HONORARY MEMBERS, FELLOWS, PROFESSIONAL ASSOCIATES, AND ASSOCIATES. There are also classes of PROBATIONERS and STUDENTS attached to, but not corporate members of, the Institution.

STUDENTS.—In order to qualify for admission to the Class of Students, candidates must be between the ages of 18 and 21, must have passed either the Preliminary Examination of the Institution or one of the specified Examinations accepted in lieu thereof, and must be either (1) pupils or technical assistants in the offices of members of the Institution or other persons substantially engaged in one or other of the branches of the profession as defined above ; or (2) studying with a view to entering the profession at such places of professional instruction as the Council may approve.

Candidates under the age of 21 are advised to become Students ; for, in addition to the use of the Library and Loan Library, receipt of the Journal and the right to attend meetings, they are entitled to substantial advantages in the Professional Examinations in respect of fees and percentage of pass marks.

Students remain attached to their class until the end of the calendar year in which they attain the age of 21, and may then be enrolled in the class of Probationers.

PROBATIONERS are persons whose period of Studentship has expired or who have passed the Intermediate Examination. They may continue as Probationers until the end of the calendar year during which they shall have been for five years enrolled in that class, or until the end of the third calendar year after that in which they passed the Intermediate Examination, whichever period first terminates.

All candidates for the Intermediate Examination are required to give an undertaking that, if successful in passing, they will forthwith become Probationers and so remain for the full term allowed by the By-Laws.

Probationers are entitled to use the Library and Loan Library, to attend meetings and to receive the publications.

PROFESSIONAL ASSOCIATES.—Candidates desirous of election to the class of Professional Associates must be not less than 21 years of age, and must have passed the Preliminary Examination (or an examination accepted in lieu thereof) and the Intermediate and Final Examinations. Candidates holding a University degree in subjects approved by the Council as appertaining to the surveying profession may take a single examination in place of the Intermediate and Final. After passing the examinations, candidates are eligible for election to the class of Professional Associates, provided that they are no longer in statu pupillari and are actually engaged in professional work as Surveyors.

FELLOWS.—Candidates must be not less than 30 years of age, must have passed either (1) the Preliminary or an exempting examination and the Intermediate and Final Examinations, or (2) the Direct Fellowship Examination ; and must have held for five years, and be holding, a position of complete responsibility equivalent to that of a principal in an established business.

There are special arrangements for the election of Colonial Fellows.

ASSOCIATES must be persons over 21 years of age, not Surveyors by profession, whose pursuits are such as to qualify them to co-operate with Surveyors in the advancement of professional knowledge.

HONORARY MEMBERS must be persons who, either by reason of their position or experience, or their eminence in science, may be enabled to render assistance in promoting the objects of the Institution; but are not engaged in practice as Surveyors in Great Britain or Ireland. They have the privilege of being present and taking part in all Ordinary General Meetings, and of access to the Library, but no right of voting, discussing or otherwise interfering in the affairs of the Institution; nor are they called upon to contribute to its funds.

ELECTION TO MEMBERSHIP, other than Honorary Membership, is by ballot of all the corporate members of the Institution. All Fellows, Professional Associates and Associates are required, within twelve months of their election, to attend an Ordinary General Meeting, or, in the case of members residing at a distance from London, a meeting of their County Branch, for the purpose of formal introduction, and to sign the Register. They are also required, within the same period, to deliver to the Council an original paper on a subject connected with the profession, or to make a donation to the Library Fund.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	Annual Subscription.				Admission Fee.
Student	1	1	0	.	—
Probationer	1	1	0	.	—

Colonial Fellow	2	2	0	.	5	5	0
Fellow	4	4	0	.	7	7	0

EXAMINATIONS.

THE PRELIMINARY AND SPECIAL EXAMINATIONS.—Any candidate intending to follow the profession of Surveyor will be accepted on application, but acceptance for the Preliminary Examination does not imply that a candidate, if successful in passing, will necessarily be regarded as eligible for enrolment as a Student, or for admission to the Intermediate and Final Examinations. There are no age limits, but candidates over the age of 25 are permitted to sit for a special Examination, instead of the Preliminary, to test their general knowledge and education. The entrance fee for the examination is £1 11s. 6d.

THE INTERMEDIATE EXAMINATION.—A Candidate must be 19 years of age or over, and, unless studying at a recognised place of instruction, must be a pupil or technical assistant* in the office of a member of the Institution or other person substantially engaged in the profession of Surveyor as defined above. The entrance fee for the Examination is £4 4s. 0d.

THE FINAL EXAMINATION is open to candidates who have passed the Intermediate Examination; the entrance fee is £4 4s. 0d.

THE DIRECT FELLOWSHIP EXAMINATION.—Candidates for this Examination must be more than 30 years of age, and their position must be such as would make them eligible for direct election as Fellows on passing the Examination. The entrance fee is £5 5s. 0d.

The Preliminary and Special Examinations are held annually in January, and the Intermediate, Final and Direct Fellowship Examinations in March. Applications to sit for any one of the Examinations must be on the prescribed forms and must be submitted, together with the examination fees, during the previous September.

The Intermediate, Final, and Direct Fellowship Examinations are divided into four Sub-Divisions, to cover the four main branches into which the profession may roughly be divided, viz.:—I., Chiefly Land Agency; II., Chiefly Valuation; III., Chiefly Building or Quantities; and IV., Chiefly Mining. Candidates may elect to be examined in any one of these sub-divisions, but those proceeding to the Final Examination after passing the Intermediate must do so in the same sub-division.

THE SPECIAL SINGLE EXAMINATION for holders of University degrees in a course of study approved by the Council as bearing upon the profession, is held concurrently with the other professional examinations, and combines the subjects required to be taken in both the Intermediate and Final. Entrance fee £4 4s.

Copies of the rules governing the examinations and giving full particulars thereof, may be obtained from the Secretary on application. The detailed Syllabus and List of Text-Books (which relates to the professional examinations only) can be obtained at a charge of 1s., and past examination papers at 2s. for each annual set.

 Articles, although much to be recommended as a method of training for the profession, are not an essential condition of admission to the Examinations.*

THE LIBRARY AND COLLECTIONS.

The Institution Library contains approximately 12,000 volumes, and includes a topographical section comprising the great County Histories, all the principal local histories, and a London collection; a series of works on British Agriculture, both ancient and modern, and the allied subjects of Forestry, Geology, Botany, Agricultural Chemistry and Vegetable Physiology; a complete series of professional text-books, including the latest works ; works of general science ; the Public General Statutes from the earliest times ; Law Reports and Law Text-Books ; Parliamentary Papers and Reports ; the Transactions of kindred societies and general works of reference. It also contains a number of valuable single works and rare editions of special interest to the book-lover, as well as a collection of old maps, charts and plans.

The Loan Library is independent of the General Reference Library, and contains some 1,600 volumes, including all the principal professional text-books, which may be borrowed by members according to the prescribed rules.

The Forestry Collection contains a series of home-grown timber exhibits in planks and sections ; preserved specimens of the foliage, flowers and fruit of the more common British trees and of timber insects, injurious and otherwise ; and a collection of saws, tools and other implements used in forestry. Various causes of damage to timber and the commercial uses to which British woods may be put, are also illustrated.

The Geological Museum includes specimens of the fossils found in British geological formations and a collection of stones used in building.
